Test of robbery under this section [Code 1942, § 2367] is whether or not any of the property named in indictment was taken by violence, force or fear. Passons v. State, 208 Miss. 545, 45 So. 2d 131 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

The means used to effect a robbery is important only to the extent that it reasonably instills a disabling apprehension of great personal injury. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

In robbery prosecution, taking of gloves from pocket of clothing worn by person robbed into possession of one of assailants held sufficient asportation. Richardson v. State, 168 Miss. 788, 151 So. 910 (1934), error overruled, 151 So. 558 (Miss. 1934).

4. —What constitutes robbery.

Because there were two victims to defendant's robbery, double jeopardy did not attach. Towner v. State, 812 So. 2d 1109 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

State met its burden of proving robbery under statute by showing that defendant, prior to break in of victim's home, had asked for gun and whether victim had money in her home, had awakened another person and persuaded him to go to victim's home and break in, had used physical force and fear to acquire property of victims, and, after entering home, had found pistol and used it to effectuate crime. Reed v. State, 506 So. 2d 277 (Miss. 1987).

The crime of armed robbery is committed by a motorist who, after having his fuel tank filled at a service station, got away without paying by pointing a rifle at the attendant. Hermann v. State, 239 Miss. 523, 123 So. 2d 846 (1960).

Where the defendant, who was indicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2367], was shown to have left the house immediately following the violence against the prosecuting witness, and it would have been conjecture to assume that the defendant did not take the prosecuting witness's purse prior to the assault and battery upon her, defendant's conviction was reversed, since this section [Code 1942, § 2367] did not apply to the offense proved. Register v. State, 232 Miss. 128, 97 So. 2d 919 (1957).

This statute [Code 1942, § 2367] was not applicable to a situation where, as the outgrowth of the whipping of negro boy, defendants who had come to take the boy home, upon being accosted by a white man took from him a knife and struck him, and the victim later discovered that the sum of $2 was missing from his person. Fortenberry v. State, 190 Miss. 729, 1 So. 2d 585 (1941).

Persons who shot man who opened door and then entered store and shot others and then left store held not guilty of robbery. Williamson v. State, 167 Miss. 783, 149 So. 795 (1933).

5. — What constitutes deadly weapon.

Because inmate was informed by the court, prior to his guilty plea, of all the elements of the crime of robbery with a deadly weapon under § 97-3-79, and that a B.B. gun constituted a "deadly weapon," his claim on appeal that his plea was involuntary and unintelligent was without merit. Cherry v. State, 24 So. 3d 1048 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Although a knife was a deadly weapon that qualified to sustain a plea for armed robbery, a judgment was remanded for a correction where it incorrectly showed that an inmate used a firearm instead. Hinton v. State, 947 So. 2d 979 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 94 (Miss. 2007).

A metal pellet gun weighing 3 or 4 pounds was a "deadly weapon" within the meaning of this section, even though there was a piece missing from the weapon rendering it inoperative and it was not loaded at the time of the robbery, since it could have been used to club the victim and thereby inflict serious bodily injury. Saucier v. State, 562 So. 2d 1238 (Miss. 1990).

Jury may find blank starter pistol used during robbery to be deadly weapon. Duckworth v. State, 477 So. 2d 935 (Miss. 1985).

Assessment of the death penalty was not justified where a dirk knife rather than a pistol was used in a robbery, there was no real likelihood of personal injury and none occurred, and the defendant participated in the robbery under the urging of an accomplice. Augustine v. State, 201 Miss. 277, 28 So. 2d 243 (1946).

A pistol is a "deadly weapon" within statutes denouncing the exhibition or carrying of such weapon, even without proof that the pistol is loaded or presently capable of committing a violent injury. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

6. —Property subject to robbery.

When a person takes property in which he himself maintains title, but which is legally in the possession of the victim, by force or threat of force by exhibition of a deadly weapon, the armed-robbery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, applies. Veazy v. State, 113 So. 3d 1226 (Miss. 2013).

Defendants were properly convicted of armed robbery for taking a car from the victim's repair shop at gunpoint; although one defendant had legal title to the car, the victim had the right of possession of the car through his mechanic's lien under

Miss. Code Ann. § 85-7-107. Veazy v. State, 113 So. 3d 1226 (Miss. 2013).

Contraband liquor may be the subject of robbery. Passons v. State, 208 Miss. 545, 45 So. 2d 131 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

In robbery prosecution, property taken need not have actual pecuniary value if it appears that it had some value to person robbed. Richardson v. State, 168 Miss. 788, 151 So. 910 (1934), error overruled, 151 So. 558 (Miss. 1934).

That gloves taken were preserved and carried in pocket of owner held sufficient, in robbery prosecution, to show that owner considered them of some value to himself. Richardson v. State, 168 Miss. 788, 151 So. 910 (1934), error overruled, 151 So. 558 (Miss. 1934).

7. Indictment.

Indictment charging defendant juvenile with capital murder was not defective, even though it referenced this section and did not provide the essential elements of the underlying crime of robbery, since it put defendant on notice that he was being charged with capital murder based on a robbery and defendant was aware that the charged underlying felony was robbery and not armed robbery. Hye v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 292 (Miss. Ct. App. May 28, 2013).

In a case in which defendant, who pled guilty to armed robbery, appealed the dismissal of his motion for post-conviction relief, he argued unsuccessfully that the indictment was defective because Count IV charged him with attempted armed robbery, not armed robbery. Count IV basically tracked the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, but it included the phrase “attempt to take” instead of using the entire phrase of “take or attempt to take; however, because the act of armed robbery was complete upon the attempt, it was immaterial that the indictment only charged that defendant attempted to take the personal property of the victim. Ewing v. State, 34 So. 3d 612 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 245 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant’s indictment included the relevant language from Miss. Code Ann.

§ 97-3-79 and the evidence clearly showed that the armed robbery crimes were based on the same act or transaction. Thus, there was no defect in the indictment under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-2(1). Thomas v. State, 14 So. 3d 812 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Indictment sufficiently charged the offense because it charged that defendant and her co-defendants acted with the intent to steal the property of the bank. The indictment also charged that they did so by exhibiting and firing a pistol — acts which put the employees of the bank in fear of immediate injury to their persons. Glenn v. State, 996 So. 2d 148 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In an armed robbery case, there was a sufficient factual basis for the plea under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04 based on a specific indictment that alleged that defendant and his associate took property from persons at a bank, and they were in fear of immediate injury due to the exhibition of deadly weapons; after a reading of the indictment during the plea hearing, defendant stated that he committed the crime. Robinson v. State, 964 So. 2d 609 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because defendant’s indictment failed to charge the essential elements of armed robbery, the circuit court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the offense of armed robbery, but the indictment properly charged defendant with the crime of simple robbery; however, defendant’s guilty plea was involuntary because he was not informed of the true nature and consequences of the charge. Garner v. State, 944 So. 2d 934 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 534 (Miss. 2007).

Burglary conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 was upheld where acquittal on armed robbery charges, brought under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, did not invoke the doctrine of merger because it was not, as alleged, impossible for defendant to have committed the armed robbery without first committing the burglary. Smallwood v. State, 930 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Because the information did not sufficiently charge defendant with armed robbery, as it did not charge the overt act as the display of a weapon by another perpetrator and then the shooting of the victim, defendant's armed robbery conviction, the result of a guilty plea, was reversed; however, because there was a sufficient charge of simple robbery, if not for the word "attempt," the court affirmed a conviction of robbery, and remanded for sentencing on that count. Neal v. State, 936 So. 2d 463 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 punishes attempted armed robbery in the same way as armed robbery. Thus, it is irrelevant that an indictment only states that a defendant "attempts to take" because according to the statute, a person can be convicted of armed robbery while attempting to complete the act; the act of robbery is complete upon the attempt. Calhoun v. State, 881 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Statement that defendant had used a handgun was an adequate substitute for the phrase "deadly weapon" in the indictment. Parisie v. State, 848 So. 2d 880 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Indictment against defendant as drawn did not fail to charge offense against State of Mississippi where: (1) indictment for attempted armed robbery was not vague, because it practically mimicked statute in setting out offense; (2) issue of intent was question for jury, and state had not failed to prove overt act to support attempted armed robbery charge by failing to prove intent to steal, where issue of intent was matter of which witness jury believed; (3) issue of whether attempt to steal was aborted by extraneous intervention or by defendant was question of which witness jury believed, where there was dispute as to whether or not police intervention frustrated attempt; and, (4) guilty verdict was not against overwhelming sufficiency and weight of evidence, because issues came down to which witness jury believed. Burney v. State, 515 So. 2d 1154 (Miss. 1987), but see McCarty v. State, 554 So. 2d 909 (Miss. 1989).

Under former provisions, when defendant was tried and convicted of rape, robbery, and kidnapping under improper multicount indictment charging separate offenses, conviction and sentence under kidnapping offense would be affirmed and remaining charges reversed where entire proof in record was relevant to and admissible under kidnapping charge. Brock v. State, 483 So. 2d 358 (Miss. 1986), but see McCarty v. State, 554 So. 2d 909 (Miss. 1989).

There is no legal impediment to the State's mounting of three separate prosecutions for armed robbery under this section, kidnapping, and forcible rape, even though the three offenses arise of a common nucleus of operative fact; accordingly, where the defendant affirmatively requested that the proceeding against him on all three charges be consolidated for pre-trial and trial purposes, the trial court properly held that the defendant had consciously waived any objections he may have had to the multi-count indictment. Ward v. State, 461 So. 2d 724 (Miss. 1984).

An indictment that charged both attempted robbery and the completion of the offense was not fatally defective, since this section makes both an attempt to take and an actual taking of another's personal property against his will by violence or threat of violence the crime of robbery. Harris v. State, 445 So. 2d 1369 (Miss. 1984).

The words "unlawfully" and "feloniously" in an indictment are sufficient to make the necessary charge of "intent to steal." McFadden v. State, 408 So. 2d 476 (Miss. 1981).

An indictment charging the accused with robbery wherein it stated and charged the defendant with having taken from the person "and" from the presence of the owner personal property obtained in the robbery, was not defective because of the use of the word "and" rather than the statutory "or" and also was not defective as charging two separate offenses. Payne v. State, 215 Miss. 390, 61 So. 2d 146 (1952).

Indictment charging robbery by assault by use of pistol with intent to take personal property of another included charge of assault. Williamson v. State, 167 Miss. 783, 149 So. 795 (1933).

Where a record indicated defendant was aware he was being prosecuted under statute making robbery, or attempt at robbery, capital offense under certain conditions, indictment, though awkwardly worded, was sufficient. Hall v. State, 166 Miss. 331, 148 So. 793 (1933).

8. Evidence; generally.

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery and the denial of his motion for a new trial were both proper because the appellate court failed to see how the judge's decision to change his mind and sustain the State's objection on a ground not specified by the State had any effect on defendant's trial. Further, the exclusion of the victim's testimony concerning the officer's belief as to the victim's intoxication did not affect any substantial right of defendant, Miss. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). McClendon v. State, 17 So. 3d 184 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the hearsay objection as to whether anyone stated that defendant or his accomplice were attempting to steal a car where defendant argued that the testimony would have constituted a hearsay exception as to the declarant's intent, plan, or motive to do something in the future under Miss. R. Evid. 803(3); however, the exclusion of that testimony was not grounds for reversal because it did not affect any of defendant's substantial rights as it was not necessary to his defense. White v. State, 969 So. 2d 72 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 658 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or, in the alternative, a new trial, where all of the evidence pointed to the fact that defendant committed the armed robbery; it was clear from the record and from defendant's statements that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to have convicted him and it was the job of the jury to determine which witnesses were credible and which were not. Nason v. State, 840 So. 2d 788 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Application of the Biggers factors to defendant's case established that: (1) the victim of the armed robbery had ample opportunity to observe defendant; (2) while defendant was present in the store, there was nothing to distract the victim's attention from him; (3) the victim phoned a description of the robber to the police department immediately after the robbery; (4) the victim did not express any uncertainty about the identification of defendant; and (5) the time between the robbery and the identification was short; thus, there were sufficient indicia of reliability to allow the identification of defendant and defendant's convictions for armed robbery and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon were affirmed. Ferguson v. State, 856 So. 2d 334 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for robbery, evidence that the defendant threatened to rape one of the victims and that he committed two acts of sexual battery upon her was admissible to show a continuing scheme to terrorize his victims, thereby ensuring their continued passivity and guarding against the possibility of resistance as his associates continued the process of looting a business. Weathersby v. State, 769 So. 2d 857 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

A defendant who was convicted of armed robbery was entitled to an evidentiary hearing pursuant to §§ 99-39-13 through 99-39-23 on the issue of whether he was afforded ineffective assistance of counsel during the plea process, where the defendant alleged that his attorney erroneously informed him that if he accepted the prosecution's plea bargain offer of 15 years imprisonment he would be eligible for parole after serving 3 years and 9 months of his sentence, and that he would not have accepted the prosecution's plea bargain offer had he known that he would be ineligible for parole for 10 years pursuant to § 47-7-3(1)(d), which provides that a person convicted of robbery and sentenced to more than 10 years imprisonment shall not be eligible for parole until after serving at least 10 years of the sentence. Alexander v. State, 605 So. 2d 1170 (Miss. 1992).

Notwithstanding that the state failed to prove that a deadly weapon was displayed at the time motel operator was sprayed with mace, defendant's conviction of an attempt to commit armed robbery of the motel operator was supported by evidence showing that defendant, along with others, planned the armed robbery, armed and transported themselves to the motel site, with the defendant and another hidden in the back seat of the automobile used in the commission of the crime, and by shooting at the motel operator to effectuate and escape. Edwards v. State, 500 So. 2d 967 (Miss. 1986).

A money box stolen from the store by armed robbers was admissible in evidence at their trial where, prior to admission, the prosecution elicited a creditable chain of custody through the testimony of the store clerk who was on duty on the night of the robbery, and defense counsel for each of the robbers was afforded an opportunity to re-cross-examine the clerk following the introduction of the box. Evans v. State, 499 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 1986).

Admission into evidence at an armed robbery trial of hearsay statements of 2 detectives not for the purpose of showing the information upon which those detectives acted, but in an effort to prove the truth of the matter asserted in the statements, and to bolster the state's case, constituted reversible error. Bridgeforth v. State, 498 So. 2d 796 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, evidence that the victim had been stabbed with a knife three times and shot through the chest during the course of the armed robbery was properly admitted, notwithstanding the contention that this was evidence of an entirely different crime from that for which defendant had been indicted, where the exhibition of a deadly weapon was a key element of the crime of armed robbery and a description of the crime could not be made adequately without describing the weapons used and what was done with those weapons. Page v. State, 369 So. 2d 757 (Miss. 1979).

Jury issue was presented as to whether or not defendant took pistol and police car from policemen for the purpose of permanently depriving the owners of their property or whether or not he took the property with no intention of permanently depriving the owners of its possession but merely for the purpose of resisting arrest. Thomas v. State, 278 So. 2d 469 (Miss. 1973).

The admission of the testimony of the victim of an alleged robbery that cash money and checks had been taken from him was not error, even though the police seized the funds at the time when they captured the defendant and subsequently returned the funds to the victim, and, similarly, the admission of the victim's testimony that the police subsequently returned the funds to him was not prejudicial. Gisch v. State, 259 So. 2d 118 (Miss. 1972).

In an armed robbery prosecution, where the defendant's only defense on the merits was his insanity at the time of the commission of the offense, the jury, in determining defendant's sanity at the time of the crime, could consider the fact that defendant had testified in an intelligent and perceptive manner. Eslick v. State, 238 Miss. 666, 119 So. 2d 355 (1960).

In a robbery prosecution against a daughter, who had testified that she had grabbed her mother's metal box containing money and a pistol and fled to prevent the mother from obtaining the pistol, evidence that on several occasions the mother had shot at members of the accused's family should have been permitted to go to the jury as tending to show the bias and prejudice of the mother, who was a prosecuting witness, even though it was not part of the res gestae. Hardin v. State, 232 Miss. 470, 99 So. 2d 600 (1958).

9. —Identification.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's armed robbery conviction because: (1) the victim made a positive pretrial identification of defendant when she picked his picture out of a photographic lineup three days after the robbery occurred; (2) an accomplice positively identified defendant as the perpetrator; (3) the officer told the jury about the search that was conducted at defendant's residence and where and how the gun was found; and (4) the accomplice stated that defendant owned a gun. Trammell v. State, 62 So. 3d 424 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress a robbery victim's pretrial identification of him there was substantial credible evidence supporting the trial court's ruling that there was not a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification when a six-pack photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, the victim had ample opportunity to view defendant at the time of the crime, and from her testimony, it was clear that the victim paid a great deal of attention to defendant; throughout the case, including pretrial identification, the victim never wavered in her identification of defendant as her attacker, and she gave a detailed description of defendant, identified him from two photographs without hesitating, and positively identified him during trial more than once. Williams v. State, 40 So. 3d 630 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Although a show-up identification was inappropriate where the defendant was already in custody and the eyewitness was not grievously injured nor was there any threat that he was unavailable for a later line-up, the trial court did not err in failing to suppress evidence of the show-up identification where the eyewitness had an excellent opportunity to view the defendant during the robbery and had made the identification within 24 hours of the robbery. Outerbridge v. State, 947 So. 2d 279 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's argument on appeal was that there was no personal in-court identification of him as one of the men who participated in the robbery. However, the judge had recessed court for lunch and defendant failed to return to court on his bond, and upon a motion by the State, trial proceeded in his absence; because defendant chose not to return for his trial, he could not complain that he was not personally identified in court, where it was a consequence of his own voluntary act. McCoy v. State, 881 So. 2d 312 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant was properly convicted of armed robbery where a convenience store clerk identified defendant in a photographic array as the person who entered the store, pulled the store gun on the clerk, and demanded money from the register. Scott v. State, 877 So. 2d 549 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

State's identification of defendant consisted of the victim's eyewitness identification from a photo line-up and in-court identification, and a videotape of the robbery which showed the robber; moreover, the trial court instructed the jury to consider Neil v. Biggers to determine whether the identification made by the victim was credible and reliable, and the jury resolved the issue of credibility in favor of the State's witnesses. Thus, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for robbery with the use of a deadly weapon, and aggravated assault. Houston v. State, 887 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 888 So. 2d 1177, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1448 (Miss. 2004).

A robbery victim's in-court identification of the defendant was not tainted by her extensive observation of the defendant at a pre-trial parole revocation hearing where the victim testified at the suppression hearing concerning her ample opportunity to observe the defendant at the time of the robbery. Saucier v. State, 562 So. 2d 1238 (Miss. 1990).

At trial of charge of armed robbery of bank, the asking of a question of a fingerprint expert as to whether in the expert's opinion the defendant had touched a petty cash slip left at the crime scene, while overly broad, was not irreversible error in view of the fact that the defendant was linked to the scene by his fingerprints on the door of the bank, and by the identification by 2 eyewitnesses. Giles v. State, 501 So. 2d 406 (Miss. 1987).

Even though it was possible that the jury would infer from a FBI fingerprint card that defendant had been involved in prior criminal activity, the admission into evidence of such a card at a trial of a charge of armed robbery of a bank was not error, where it was essential to the state's establishment of the identity of fingerprints on the bank door and the petty cash receipts slip found in the bank and, moreover, among the exceptions to the rule limiting admissibility of evidence of other crimes is when the evidence is used for identification. Giles v. State, 501 So. 2d 406 (Miss. 1987).

Sales clerk's in-court identification of armed robbery defendant was not tainted because prior to trial she had identified him from a photograph of a police lineup in which he was the only person wearing a fishing hat like the one worn by the jewelry store robber, where, on the day of the robbery, the sales clerk had furnished the police with a composite sketch of the robber, and in court she had repeated her identification of defendant with great con-

A photograph lineup, held some 6 months after the armed robbery, consisting of 5, 3 inch by 5 inch, photographs of various men, including the defendant who was in no way conspicuously singled out, was not so unnecessarily suggestive as to taint positive in-court identification of defendant as the robber by the victim, who had also identified defendant at the photograph lineup. Ex parte Baxley, 496 So. 2d 688 (Ala. 1986).

In court identification of defendant as person who committed armed robbery in drugstore is not impermissibly tainted by prior showup at drugstore or by newspaper article in which defendant's photograph has appeared where, under totality of circumstances, there is no substantial likelihood that witnesses have misidentified defendant due to fact that witnesses had ample opportunity and reason to remember defendant's faith, witnesses description of robber to police conform generally with defendant's actual appearance, and witnesses positively identified defendant at lineup held one month after crime. Lannom v. State, 464 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 1985).

In a robbery prosecution, testimony of a deputy sheriff investigating the robbery that he took the prosecuting witness into a store and asked him if he saw the two men who had robbed him, whereupon the prosecuting witness pointed out the accused and another, was admissible for the purpose of showing that the accused was lawfully arrested upon a reasonable belief that he was the guilty person. Reed v. State, 232 Miss. 432, 99 So. 2d 455 (1958).

Letter from the Federal Bureau of Identification, offered by defendant, to the effect that no fingerprints lifted on robbed premises matched defendant's was properly excluded since it contained no certificate or copies of the fingerprints compared. Wooton v. Bethea, 209 Miss. 374, 47 So. 2d 158 (1950).

Admission of evidence of prior extrajudicial identification of defendant as a participant in the robbery by prosecuting witness who also identified defendant at the trial could not be complained of, where evidence of the earlier identification out of court was admitted without objection. Flegg v. State, 202 Miss. 179, 30 So. 2d 615 (1947).

In prosecution for robbery with deadly weapon, where person robbed could not positively identify accused, evidence that witness reaching reported scene of robbery few minutes later saw accused fifty yards away armed with rifle and that accused shot witness, held competent as showing identity of robber and accused's guilt of robbery, though it was evidence of a separate crime. Brown v. State, 171 Miss. 157, 157 So. 363 (1934).

10. —Prior to other offenses.

Corroborated testimony indicated that the incident began as a demand by defendant and his accomplice for the victim to give them some money, and the testimony also indicated that when the victim refused to hand over any money, defendant and his accomplice threatened the victim, attacked him with weapons, and left his unconscious body on the street; there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find the necessary elements of robbery, and the circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Ames v. State, 17 So. 3d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 433 (Miss. 2009).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, evidence of the defendant's prior conviction of attempted strong-armed robbery was properly admitted into evidence where the defendant had testified that he would not hurt anyone in order to obtain money. When the defendant injected his "character for peaceableness or violence" into the trial, the prosecution was entitled to rebut his protestations that he was not prone to violence; the prosecution was properly allowed to challenge the truthfulness of the defendant's statement that he would not threaten anyone by showing that in the past he had done exactly what he said he would not do. Rowe v. State, 562 So. 2d 121 (Miss. 1990).

Even though it was possible that the jury would infer from a FBI fingerprint card that defendant had been involved in prior criminal activity, the admission into evidence of such a card at a trial of a charge of armed robbery of a bank was not error, where it was essential to the state's establishment of the identity of fingerprints on the bank door and the petty cash receipts slip found in the bank and, moreover, among the exceptions to the rule limiting admissibility of evidence of other crimes is when the evidence is used for identification. Giles v. State, 501 So. 2d 406 (Miss. 1987).

At an armed robbery trial, state's elicitation of testimony from the girl friend of defendant's accomplice which implicated defendant in the theft of cash, handguns and personal checks belonging to the witness's parents constituted a plain and reversible error, since the theft was wholly unrelated to the crime at issue, and prejudiced the minds of the jurors against the defendant. Usry v. State, 498 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 1986).

At armed robbery trial, where defense counsel, on cross-examination of state's witness, elicited information concerning stolen guns, thus inviting prosecutor to follow-up on that line of questioning on re-direct, defendant was not in a position to complain that evidence of a crime or offense other than the one with which he was charged had erroneously been admitted into evidence. Brown v. State, 495 So. 2d 508 (Miss. 1986).

Defendant charged with armed robbery is denied fair trial by introduction of detail surrounding prior conviction and evidence of other crimes not resulting in convictions; error may be raised on appeal notwithstanding defendant's failure to object at time of trial where development of inadmissible detail is lengthy and repetitious. Gallion v. State, 469 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. 1985).

Where the prosecuting witness had denied that she had ever been convicted of any offenses other than driving without a driver's license and permitting gambling on premises occupied by her, the accused was entitled to show other convictions of the prosecuting witness by a deputy circuit clerk, whose office was a custodian of the docket of a man who was formerly a justice of the peace. Hardin v. State, 232 Miss. 470, 99 So. 2d 600 (1958).

In prosecution for robbery with deadly weapon, where person robbed could not positively identify accused, evidence that witness reaching reported scene of robbery few minutes later saw accused fifty yards away armed with rifle and that accused shot witness, held competent as showing identity of robber and accused's guilt of robbery, though it was evidence of a separate crime. Brown v. State, 171 Miss. 157, 157 So. 363 (1934).

In prosecution for robbery with deadly weapon, sheriff's testimony as to accused's flight and subsequent capture held admissible as against complaint that evidence was of flight from subsequent shooting of witness and not from robbery, where two crimes were so closely related in time that flight from one could not be shown without showing other unless evidence of second crime were excluded. Brown v. State, 171 Miss. 157, 157 So. 363 (1934).

11. —Confession of accused.

Post arrest confessions of 3 defendants charged with armed robbery were properly admitted into evidence via testimony of police officer where none of the confessions implicated one of the codefendants. Evans v. State, 499 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 1986).

At the joint trial of 2 defendants charged with armed robbery, the admission of their confessions, found to have been otherwise admissible, in the state's case-in-chief, did not violate each defendant's right to confrontation of witnesses and was not improper, although both confessions incriminated each defendant and neither of them took the stand, where, upon the admission of the confessions; the trial judge instructed the jury that each confession could not be considered as evidence against the other defendant, that the confessions were almost identical in every detail, and that each defendant admitted his own guilt. Seales v. State, 495 So. 2d 475 (Miss. 1986).

Armed robbery defendant's confession was not inadmissible as product of illegal arrest where there was probable cause for the arrest. Moore v. State, 493 So. 2d 1295 (Miss. 1986).

12. Sufficiency of evidence; generally.

Evidence was sufficient to establish the elements of armed robbery beyond a reasonable doubt because defendant failed to show how a DNA analysis would aid his defense in any way, and both victims identified defendant as one of the two men who robbed them; in addition to the in-court identifications, on the night of the robbery, both victims identified defendant from a photo array as one of the robbers. Lewis v. State, 112 So. 3d 1092 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Verdict convicting defendant of armed robbery was not contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence because a co-conspirator's testimony was corroborated in part by three witnesses; the testimony was not inherently unreliable or substantially impeached because a large part of it was corroborated by other evidence or testimony. Foster v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 135 (Miss. Ct. App. Mar. 26, 2013).

Conviction for armed robbery was not contrary to the weight of the evidence. An eyewitness testified that defendant stole a gun and backpack from the victim, the jury could draw the reasonable inference from the evidence that defendant had motive to rob the victim, and the victim testified that defendant placed a gun at the back of the victim's head. Renfro v. State, 118 So. 3d 560 (Miss. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated assault and armed robbery and the verdicts were not against the weight of the evidence as he was present, consenting, aiding, and abetting the commission of the robbery by one of the accomplices, and the two accomplices' testimony was more than slightly supported by corroborating eyewitness testimony and forensic evidence. Grossley v. State, 127 So. 3d 1143 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 26 (Miss. 2014).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for armed robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, because the victim's identification of defendant as the robber was based on, inter alia, defendant being a frequent customer of the store, defendant doing odd jobs at the store, and the victim recognizing defendant's voice and distinctive speech pattern; the victim stated several times she was one hundred percent sure that defendant had robbed her store. Lewis v. State, 110 So. 3d 814 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery was proper, as an eyewitness identified defendant, clothes matching those worn by a robber on a surveillance video were found at defendant's home, and defendant confessed. Pinkston v. State, 50 So. 3d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for robbery by use of a deadly weapon was appropriate because the evidence was sufficient. There were surveillance videos documenting both of defendant's visits to the gas station; the jury heard the codefendants testify that defendant was involved with the planning and execution of the robbery, which included testimony that defendant was the lookout and that he was supposed to wave his hand if it was clear to rob the clerk; and surveillance video showed defendant waiving his hand shortly before the clerk was robbed. Pritchett v. State, 32 So. 3d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for robbery because defendant pointed a gun at the victim and demanded money, which he ultimately got; the verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because the victim consistently identified defendant as her attacker. Williams v. State, 40 So. 3d 630 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's convictions for house burglary, aggravated assault, armed robbery, and auto theft were proper because the evidence was sufficient. In part, defendant severely beat the victim, demanded that she give him her purse, and then took her purse, a gun, and a set of keys to the victim's vehicle. The victim later identified defendant, based upon her own independent recollection, in a photographic lineup. Brunner v. State, 37 So. 3d 645 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 36 So. 3d 455, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 323 (Miss. 2010).

Evidence, including photographic procedure used to identify defendant and testimony of two victims that they were placed in fear of immediate injury as a gun was pointed at each of them in order to induce them to hand over money from each of their case registers, was sufficient to convict defendant of two counts of armed robbery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Conner v. State, 26 So. 3d 383 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 24 So. 3d 1038, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 36 (Miss. 2010).

There was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of three counts of armed robbery. The jury was presented with testimony and evidence that defendant feloniously took money from three victims, against their will, by putting each man in fear of immediate injury by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, i.e., the gun. A rational jury could have found the essential elements of armed robbery beyond a reasonable doubt. Johnson v. State, 29 So. 3d 738 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of capital murder, the court rejected defendant's claim that the prosecution failed to produce evidence sufficient to convict him of the underlying felony of robbery because defendant's possession of the deceased victim's wallet created a reasonable inference that the property was stolen; the State's theory of the case was that defendant went back to the motel where he and the victim had been staying to get back what was rightfully his—the money in the victim's wallet, and the evidence, although circumstantial, supported this theory. During the State's case-in-chief, evidence was presented to establish that, after defendant left the motel earlier in the day, the victim feared his return, and when defendant did return and was unable to access the room, a motel employee told him that the door was locked from the inside; additional evidence was presented that defendant had received a significant amount of money from his mother for a business that he planned to start and that defendant was supporting the victim and was the source of the cash found inside her wallet. Goff v. State, 14 So. 3d 625 (Miss. 2009), modified by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 406 (Miss. Aug. 27, 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 559 U.S. 944, 130 S. Ct. 1513, 176 L. Ed. 2d 122, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 1251, 78 U.S.L.W. 3480 (2010).

Sufficient evidence existed to support defendant's conviction for capital murder when the evidence showed defendant was angry with the victim about his employment arrangement with the victim; defendant's girlfriend testified that defendant took the victim's money, credit cards, and car keys during the course of the murder. Lima v. State, 7 So. 3d 903 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of murder and armed robbery where defendant's companions testified that they accompanied defendant to the victim's home seeking employment; that the victim told them that they could spend the night rather than driving all the way home; that defendant told them that he was going to rob the victim; that defendant headed toward the victim's bedroom after the victim retired; that as his companions left the home, they heard gunshots coming from the bedroom and that one looked back and saw defendant taking the victim's wallet out of his pocket; and that defendant jumped into their vehicle as they were departing and he had blood on him and was carrying a gun. Further evidence was justified defendant's conviction was testimony that defendant was angry with the victim for docking his pay after finding him sleeping on the job and the testimony of defendant's brother that defendant admitted commission of the offenses. Lewis v. State, 997 So. 2d 1001 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motions for a directed verdict and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of three counts of armed robbery, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, where the defendant took money from an illegal dice game at gunpoint in an amount that was more than what he claimed rightfully belonged to him. Croft v. State, 992 So. 2d 1151 (Miss. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for attempted armed robbery because defendant disguised himself as a woman, entered the bank with his co-defendants, and shuffled around nervously as another defendant attempted to hold up the teller with a handgun, all the while shielding his face from view. Thereafter, defendant was caught attempting to escape from the abandoned safe house and he was still wearing the same women's skirt that he wore during the attempted robbery. Glenn v. State, 996 So. 2d 148 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Motion for a new trial was properly denied in an armed robbery case under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 because the verdict was not so contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence that it amounted to an unconscionable injustice where a victim identified defendant as the man who approached her in a store parking lot, demanded money, and tried to stab her. The victim testified that the parking lot was well lit, the victim had a lengthy encounter with defendant, she positively identified him from a photo lineup and later at trial, and a car matching the description given by the victim and registered to defendant's sister was located nearby; moreover, the conviction was still proper, even if the State was unable to prove that defendant obtained money from the victim. Lafont v. State, 9 So. 3d 1143 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 236 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed robbery because (1) two eyewitnesses stated that they gave defendant a ride to the casino on the evening of the robbery and that he returned shortly thereafter with a woman's purse; (2) they saw him go through the contents of the purse, pull out a cash voucher, and then throw the purse out the window; (3) the victim was able to identify defendant as the man who robbed her of her purse at gunpoint; (4) the victim stated that there was a cash voucher in her purse; and (5) two police officers testified that defendant confessed to robbing the victim at a casino; thus, defendant's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied. Carey v. State, 4 So. 3d 370 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 114 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied where the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79; witness testimony identified defendant as one of the co-participants in the armed robbery and the accomplice testimony was reasonable and not improbable or self-contradictory. Dorsey v. State, 986 So. 2d 1080 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the State presented eyewitness testimony of the armed robbery and a positive identification of defendant as the perpetrator. The testimony of the store clerk was consistent with the evidence in the surveillance tape and photographs. Jones v. State, 993 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 503 (Miss. 2008).

Where defendant and his cohort had been riding around discussing ways to make money, they approached the victims' house, knocked on the door, made up a story about running out of gas, then shot two victims, and fled the house when one of the victims' did not go down after being shot multiple times. The State proved the essential elements of armed robbery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Hughes v. State, 983 So. 2d 270 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1052, 129 S. Ct. 633, 172 L. Ed. 2d 620, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 8544, 77 U.S.L.W. 3324 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to prove defendant committed armed robbery where witnesses testified that a store manager had a purse and bank deposits in her hand when the suspect snatched them and ran away, that they interpreted the suspect's comments, such as telling them not to move and not to be a hero, as threats, and that they were afraid; further, the suspect was wearing a mask, was dressed all in black, and displayed a knife, and officers tracked defendant's scent around the rear of a building, discovered defendant lying on the ground in the woods in the same spot as the bank bags. Denman v. State, 964 So. 2d 620 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Although victims could not positively identify defendant as a second gunman who entered their apartment, they were able to provide police with a description, a stocking cap, clothing, and a gun; a reasonable jury could have found defendant guilty of burglary and robbery beyond a reasonable doubt. Guyton v. State, 962 So. 2d 722 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial after he was convicted of rape, kidnapping, and armed robbery because the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the prosecution, showed that: (1) defendant bound the victim and forcibly raped her, threatening her with a knife; (2) DNA testing from the rape kit showed the presence of semen but no sperm in the victim's vagina, consistent with a male donor not reaching ejaculation; (3) defendant forced the victim into her car; and (4) defendant forced the victim to make an ATM withdrawal and give him the cash. Taggart v. State, 957 So. 2d 981 (Miss. 2007).

In an armed robbery case, where defendant challenged the weight of the evidence in his motion for a new trial, the evidence showed that: (1) there was detailed evidence from several sources establishing that three masked men effectuated a robbery of a store by threatening the cashier with a gun; (2) defendant was identified as the gunman by his two accomplices; and (3) defendant's general description was consistent with the description of the gunman given by the cashier; thus, the evidence did not preponderate so heavily against the verdict that an unconscionable injustice would result without a new trial and defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied. Evans v. State, 957 So. 2d 430 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 because: (1) while the victim never testified that he was afraid or in fear, the evidence enabled a jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that he anticipated that personal injury would result if he did not follow defendant's instructions; (2) the victim acknowledged that during the robbery he was nervous and worried about how his friends and relatives would fare without him; (3) an accomplice testified that, after a shot was fired, the victim prayed for forgiveness for his sins; and (4) the victim behaved compliantly when threatened with the gun. Evans v. State, 957 So. 2d 430 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's convictions for murder, armed robbery, and shooting into an occupied dwelling were appropriate because the evidence was sufficient: two witnesses testified to seeing defendant shoot the victim; a witness further testified to observing defendant removing the victim's clothing and wallet; and a female testified to a shot being fired through her front door at approximately the time that the victim was shot. Conner v. State, 971 So. 2d 630 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 682 (Miss. 2007).

Under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, the essential elements of armed robbery included: (1) a felonious taking or attempt to take; (2) from the person or from the presence; (3) the personal property of another; (4) against his will; (5) by violence to his person or by putting such person in fear of immediate injury to his person by the exhibition of a deadly weapon; defendant's admission to accomplishing what the state intended to prove at trial was a sufficient factual basis for the trial judge to accept defendant's guilty plea for the crime of armed robbery. Gladney v. State, 963 So. 2d 1217 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant and his accomplice had consummated the act of armed robbery before they decided to return defendant's property to him because the offense was complete when they attempted the offense; thus, defendant was not entitled to a directed verdict, a peremptory instruction, or a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because abandonment could not occur after the crime had taken place. White v. State, 969 So. 2d 72 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 658 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant and his accomplice entered a food market with a gun, ordered the employee to lay down, and took money out of the safe, ample evidence supported the verdict convicting defendant of conspiracy to commit armed robbery. The jury heard testimony that there were phone calls between defendant and his accomplice the day before and the day of the robbery. Herring v. State, 938 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 752 (Miss. 2006).

There was sufficient evidence to uphold a conviction for conspiracy to commit armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann.

§ 97-1-1 where the evidence showed that defendant was in a casino with the other perpetrators, he stood behind one of them as a robbery took place, he ran out with them, and he received a portion of stolen money. Quawrells v. State, 938 So. 2d 370 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery was proper because a store supervisor identified defendant from the surveillance tape of the robbery, an employee and his friend identified the jacket that defendant was wearing as the one the robber was wearing, and defendant was apprehended with the exact items stolen from the store as well as a gun. McFarland v. State, 936 So. 2d 960 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a capital murder case, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the underlying armed robbery because a witness testified that two males wearing ski masks and gloves and brandishing pistols entered the store, pointed their guns at the witness and the victim, ordered them to hand over the money, and the victim was shot and killed during the robbery. Duncan v. State, 939 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or new trial where the evidence was overwhelmingly in favor of the guilty verdict convicting defendant of armed robbery; defendant was positively identified by two eyewitnesses, concealed money was found in his bed, and his alibi witness was inconsistent. Williams v. State, 923 So. 2d 990 (Miss. 2006).

Prosecution presented sufficient evidence to support the conviction of defendant as the second gunman in a robbery, where an officer testified that he positively identified defendant as the man who was driving the get-away car, co-defendant identified defendant as his partner in the robbery at the time of his arrest, and defendant failed to produce any witnesses or paperwork to corroborate his alibi. Willis v. State, 911 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 2005).

There was ample evidence to support the jury's verdict convicting defendant of capital murder because (1) an accomplice testified that he and defendant attempted to rob the victims and thus proved the underlying felony of robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79; (2) three detectives testified that defendant confessed to shooting the deceased victim; and (3) defendant's letters to the accomplice apparently expressed defendant's concern in the accomplice's testimony against him. Thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss and for a judgment of acquittal. Moore v. State, 914 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 745 (Miss. 2005).

There was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of capital murder under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19 with armed robbery as the underlying felony under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 in that he confessed to and described the murder and the accounts matched the cashier's and other witnesses'. Bush v. State, 895 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 2005).

State presented testimony from witnesses who identified defendant as the person who committed both the crimes charged. The first victim testified that while working at the convenience store, an individual later identified as defendant, held a box cutter near her neck, and took money out of the cash register and in the burglary case, the victim testified that she was awakened by her cousins screaming and directly confronted defendant; defendant's motions for a directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and a new trial, were therefore properly denied. Hill v. State, 912 So. 2d 991 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant was properly convicted of armed robbery because even if defendant did not actually go into store and commit armed robbery, one could logically conclude that defendant actively participated in the armed robbery as a lookout or driver of the getaway car for brother. Police also recovered a gun, cash, and food stamps located in a shoe box in defendant's girlfriend's apartment. Smith v. State, 904 So. 2d 1154 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

One man, who the victim identified as defendant, held a silver handgun to her head, and she testified that although he was wearing pantyhose over his face, she could see right through to his face. Upon initial police response, she gave detailed physical descriptions of all three men and of their car, and when police apprehended the men at a local gas station, the victim was taken to the gas station, she immediately identified defendant and the other two men, and officers found a silver gun on the front seat of the subject vehicle, and two other handguns in their car; the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery. McCoy v. State, 881 So. 2d 312 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of capital murder with an underlying felony of armed robbery as defendant confessed to the murder after twice waiving his Miranda rights, defendant was seen leaving the murder scene, and the victim's blood was on defendant's clothing. Further, defendant's confession that he attacked the victim when she would not lend him money was sufficient to support a finding of armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Carr v. State, 880 So. 2d 1079 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

An abundance of evidence supported the charge of armed robbery by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, including defendant's confession to the trial court that he had possessed a handgun during the robbery, the victim's testimony at the plea hearing, and two other witnesses who were available to testify that defendant had admitted to robbing the store with a handgun. Therefore, defendant's guilty plea was valid notwithstanding defendant's post-sentencing denial of possession of a handgun, and defendant's assertion that defendant only simulated having a weapon. Ray v. State, 876 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court properly convicted defendant of armed robbery where defendant was identified on video brandishing a weapon in a store clerk's face and demanding money. This evidence was sufficient to prove all elements of the crime. McDonald v. State, 881 So. 2d 895 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's armed robbery conviction, because the evidence fairly permitted an inference that defendant purposely took from the victim a cigarette pack believed to contain contraband crack cocaine rocks through the use of a deadly weapon in the form of a knife. Woods v. State, 883 So. 2d 583 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendants of robbery with a deadly weapon where, at trial, the defense presented no credible evidence tending to demonstrate the innocence of defendants and offered no reasonable explanation for their actions; the evidence in favor of defendants was not overwhelmingly contrary to the verdict. Powell v. State, 878 So. 2d 144 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 67, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 962 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence that defendants broke into a hotel room, assaulted one of the occupants with a gun, but aborted their plans after encountering unexpected resistance, was sufficient to establish that they possessed the requisite intent to commit an armed robbery; a victim's watch was found on the floor, and the jury could have found that defendants removed the watch with the intent to take it. Broomfield v. State, 878 So. 2d 207 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendants' conviction of armed robbery was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence as (1) they were identified as the men who broke into a hotel room, assaulted one of the occupants with a gun, but fled when they encountered resistance; (2) duct tape found in the hotel room matched a roll of duct tape found in defendants' vehicle; and (3) they presented no credible evidence tending to demonstrate their innocence nor a reasonable explanation for their actions. Broomfield v. State, 878 So. 2d 207 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant and the first co-defendant entered the car, the first co-defendant took the victim's money at gunpoint which was divided equally, a second co-defendant then shot and killed the victim with the gun defendant had brought, and defendant and the first co-defendant testified that they had planned the robbery, thus, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for conspiracy to commit robbery with a deadly weapon, robbery with a deadly weapon, and manslaughter. Harrington v. State, 859 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In defendant's armed robbery prosecution, the cashier not only felt the weapon at her side (a tool-like object), but also saw the weapon, and unlike in prior precedents where the victim did not see the object thought to be a deadly weapon, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for armed robbery while displaying or using a deadly weapon. Brown v. State, 859 So. 2d 1039 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's convictions of rape, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-71, and armed robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, were affirmed; defendant's claims concerning the sufficiency and weight of the evidence were procedurally barred, as defendant failed to renew a motion for a directed verdict. Collins v. State, 858 So. 2d 217 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Although a witness was unable to testify about the correct color of a get-away car, there was sufficient evidence to support convictions for armed robbery and conspiracy to commit armed robbery based on the identification of witnesses and the testimony of another perpetrator. Quinn v. State, 873 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 873 So. 2d 1032, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 597 (Miss. 2004).

Circuit court correctly denied defendant's motions for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial where the victim's statement, contradicting defendant's version of the facts, sustained the verdict; defendant's initial unrecorded statement was an admission of guilt and defendant had twice changed his story, such that the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant. Moore v. State, 858 So. 2d 190 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery was proper where the evidence was sufficient because the store clerk described defendant and the female clothing that he was wearing and identified the clothing found by police as the same that the robber was wearing; the driver likewise described the clothing and the geographic location where defendant had thrown them from her vehicle and the driver also admitted driving defendant, in the woman's clothing, to the vicinity of the liquor store and a bottle of vodka of the same size and brand stolen from the store was found in the back seat of the driver's vehicle. Peyton v. State, 858 So. 2d 156 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendants' convictions for armed robbery were proper where, at trial, the defense presented no credible evidence tending to demonstrate the innocence of defendants nor a reasonable explanation for their actions; further, the testimony concerning the manner in which defendants entered the room, their subsequent conduct, the fact that they fled and resisted arrest, and that a reasonably supported inference existed that there was an attempt to take one of the victim's watch all sustained a finding by a reasonable minded jury that defendants committed armed robbery. Broomfield v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 914 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 7, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion en banc at 878 So. 2d 207, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 1182 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

There was sufficient evidence to sustain defendant's armed robbery conviction where the evidence showed that defendant admitted to being present at the scene and was positively identified by a victim during the investigation and at trial; therefore, a trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Weaver v. State, 852 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed robbery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, and the verdict was not against the manifest weight of the evidence; testimony of the codefendant and the driver of the getaway car established that defendant was a principal in both the planning and execution of the robbery, in which defendant and the codefendant stole the victim's jewelry at gunpoint. Smith v. State, 848 So. 2d 195 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Because (1) two victims identified defendant as one of the robbers, (2) defendant's former girlfriend testified that defendant told her of the plans to rob someone and later showed her some of the stolen items, (3) the police recovered some of the stolen items from the woods behind the girlfriend's house, and (4) defendant confessed to the crime, the evidence was sufficient to uphold defendant's conviction of armed robbery; thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict, motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and defendant's request for peremptory instructions. Lott v. State, 844 So. 2d 502 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In reviewing the evidence presented to the jury, the appellate court found that the State presented evidence in accordance with Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, which revealed that defendant intentionally exhibited a deadly weapon which placed the victim in fear of injury, and that defendant took funds from the store; thus, the trial court did not err in its denial of the motion for directed verdict and the appellate court did not find that the verdict was against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Ferguson v. State, 856 So. 2d 334 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence that defendant shot the victim with a handgun while trying to take the victim's wallet but that defendant fled without taking anything was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the attempt to take the wallet was sufficient by itself to support the charge; prior appellate ruling voiding defendant's attempt to plead guilty because of confusion over what crime was being charged did not preclude conviction on remand. Stevens v. State, 840 So. 2d 785 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for attempted robbery, evidence that defendant attacked a man with a knife, was shot in the back by the man's brother, was found underneath a trailer with a bullet wound to the back, and that he twice confessed that this incident was part of an attempted robbery, was sufficient to justify denial of his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Wimberly v. State, 839 So. 2d 553 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence that defendant pointed a gun at two store clerks, demanded money, and took money from the cash register drawer and the clerks' purses, was of sufficient weight and quality that a fair-minded jury could find defendant guilty on two counts of armed robbery despite defendant's arguments that the fact that defendant's fingerprints did not match any fingerprints found on items handled by the robber, that the victims stated that the robber had a scar under his eye while defendant did not have such a scar, that no weapon was recovered from defendant, and that neither victim testified that the robber had cursed at or touched them, fired any shots, or otherwise threatened the victims showed that the State had failed to carry its burden of proof. Womack v. State, 827 So. 2d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence was sufficient to establish a causal connection between the victim's fear and his giving up his wallet where the victim testified that he parted with his wallet out of fear when the defendant pulled the hammer back on his gun. Myles v. State, 774 So. 2d 486 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault and capital murder, the evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant attempted to commit the underlying felony of armed robbery where the defendant confessed that a coperpetrator stated that he intended to rob a store, and the defendant accepted a gun from the coperpetrator, masked his face, and walked into the store wielding the gun. Spann v. State, 771 So. 2d 883 (Miss. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for a violation of the statute where (1) testimony at trial by the defendant's witness concerning her role in the crime contradicted her sworn testimony from her plea bargain hearing, (2) an officer testified that the defendant's testimony regarding his whereabouts at the time of the robbery contradicted a statement he gave shortly after his arrest, and (3) two witnesses picked the defendant out of a line-up. Grihim v. State, 760 So. 2d 865 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Because defendant forced his way into the victims' home brandishing a knife, struck the husband with the knife, demanded money from the wife, who testified that she gave defendant a small amount of cash and wrote him a check for $500 because she was afraid of him, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that defendant committed armed robbery. Thomas v. State, 754 So. 2d 579 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Though the defendant contended that he shot the victim in self-defense only, there existed substantial evidence upon which the jury could have found that he shot the victim in an effort to take his money; two different accounts of the incident were given by the defendant and the victim, but the jury was the sole judge of the weight and worth of their testimony. Brown v. State, 726 So. 2d 248 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Defendant's confession, coupled with witness' verification of defendant's story, was sufficient to support convictions of murder and armed robbery when coupled with other trial testimony, even though witness had made deal with state for lesser sentence if he testified against defendant; jury was made aware of deal. Morgan v. State, 681 So. 2d 82 (Miss. 1996).

Evidence that alleged victim of armed robbery was in fear of immediate injury was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery, despite contention he was involved in the crime, where conflicting testimony was offered as to victim's state of mind and jury had opportunity to assess credibility of victim, police officer and accomplices to crime, though one accomplice gave pretrial statement that an additional person known to another accomplice was to be included in split of money obtained in robbery. Jones v. State, 669 So. 2d 1383 (Miss. 1995).

The evidence was insufficient to support a conviction for armed robbery as an accessory before the fact where none of the witnesses who testified at trial saw the defendant prior to or during the armed robbery, the first time anyone saw the defendant was approximately 20 minutes after the commission of the armed robbery, and there was no evidence showing that the defendant was aware of his companions' activities prior to the actual commission of the armed robbery and no reasonable inference from other evidence to show any such knowledge by the defendant. Gangl v. State, 612 So. 2d 333 (Miss. 1992).

Evidence was sufficient to support guilty verdict of jury for armed robbery where defendant had been with victim in victim's truck, and had been seen by numerous people; defendant had come into store and said he was going to "clip" the white man; defendant had come back to store alone in victim's truck; and defendant had been identified as person who drove victim's truck into service station in Memphis some 4 to 5 hours after incident and used victim's credit card to buy gas and food. Ratliff v. State, 515 So. 2d 877 (Miss. 1987).

Evidence sustained defendant's conviction for armed robbery of couple parked in automobile where defendant's fingerprints were found on automobile, hairs found on defendant's shirt came from male victim, defendant's own witness exploded his explanation of why he possessed stocking and gloves similar to those used by the robber, and stories told by defendant's wife and brother-in-law to furnish him with an alibi were incredible. Watkins v. State, 500 So. 2d 462 (Miss. 1987).

Armed robbery defendant's conviction was supported by evidence which positively identified him as being in the store shortly before the robbery at an early morning hour, and further showed that he had been found on the ground behind the building into which the other robber had fled, that he had fled upon being discovered by a police officer, that he refused to halt when informed he was a robbery suspect, that he resisted the police officers attempt to take him into custody and that merchandise of the kind sold in the store was found at the place where the defendant had been found lying down. McGilvery v. State, 497 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 1986).

Notwithstanding inconsistencies in accomplice's testimony, jury verdict finding defendant guilty of armed robbery was supported by credible evidence, where one witness testified that he had left the car with a gun and returned with a cigar box containing money, and 2 other witnesses gave identification testimony. Arteigapiloto v. State, 496 So. 2d 681 (Miss. 1986).

Although an accomplice had actually robbed the store at gunpoint, defendant's guilt as a principal in the commission of the crime was clearly established by evidence that he had planned the crime, had cased the store prior to the robbery, had furnished the gun, had furnished camouflaged hat and coat worn by the accomplice while robbing the store, had supplied and driven the get-away car, and had taken the money bag when the accomplice got back into the car after the robbery. Walker v. State, 493 So. 2d 1323 (Miss. 1986).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for armed robbery where defendant admitted that he was guilty of breaking and entering, stated that he had looked through a drawer for something to steal, and further stated that the whole time he was in the house he intended to steal, with other participants who were armed, and he had only changed his mind when he couldn't find anything to steal. Kelly v. State, 493 So. 2d 356 (Miss. 1986).

Jury verdict finding defendant guilty of armed robbery as an accessory before the fact was amply supported by testimony of state's principal witness, the person who actually assaulted and wrestled jewels from the victim, that defendant masterminded the crime, which testimony was corroborated by another witness, and by testimony of the defendant placing himself with the co-defendants before the fact and with the stolen jewels on the evening of the crime. Malone v. State, 486 So. 2d 360 (Miss. 1986).

Testimony of eyewitnesses identifying defendants as persons who committed armed robbery, together with facts surrounding identification, are sufficient basis upon which jury may reject alibi testimony and convict defendants. Belino v. State, 465 So. 2d 1043 (Miss. 1985).

Identification of the accused by the robbery victim, together with corroborating evidence, was sufficient to sustain conviction under this section [Code 1942, § 2367]. Smith v. State, 242 Miss. 728, 137 So. 2d 172 (1962).

A charge that a stated amount of money was taken is supported by evidence that the exact amount was not known, but was approximately that charged. Passons v. State, 239 Miss. 629, 124 So. 2d 847 (1960).

Evidence in robbery prosecution of resistance, outcry, complaint and immediate report by victim, is sufficient to warrant jury finding that the taking was against victim's will. Littrell v. State, 19 So. 2d 438 (Miss. 1944).

Where indictment charged taking of money from person and presence of certain parties, evidence that accused took money from presence of the named parties sustained conviction of robbery under statute defining robbery as feloniously taking from the person, or from the presence of another by violence. Turner v. State, 177 Miss. 272, 171 So. 21 (1936).

13. — Exhibition or use of weapon.

Despite the testimony from defendant's alibi witnesses, the jury verdict was supported by the evidence, including the testimony of two eyewitnesses to the armed robbery committed by defendant, as well as the testimony of defendant's two accomplices, which testimony was consistent with the testimony of the eyewitnesses. Whether the gun that was used to commit the crime was operable was irrelevant. Flowers v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 17 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 14, 2014).

Defendant's conviction for attempted armed robbery was supported by the evidence because the jury was presented with testimony and evidence that defendant attempted to feloniously take money from the victims against their will by putting them in fear of immediate injury by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, i.e., a gun. Tugle v. State, 68 So. 3d 691 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 69 So. 3d 767, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2011), dismissed by 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64383 (N.D. Miss. May 6, 2013).

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery and the denial of his motion for a new trial were both proper because his argument that he was only trying to get the money that he was owed was of no avail since there was no proposition that if a man collected a debt by force and threats, that he would not be guilty of robbery. Additionally, defendant admitted to pulling out a gun and pointing it at the victim. McClendon v. State, 17 So. 3d 184 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's actions of entering the victim's home with a concealed pistol and shooting him once he learned that his accomplice failed to complete the robbery more than satisfied the requisite showing of an overt act in furtherance of his intent to rob the victim; there was abundant proof that defendant possessed the intent to rob the victim by placing him in fear through the exhibition of a deadly weapon. The evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for attempted armed robbery and conspiracy to commit armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Wallace v. State, 9 So. 3d 433 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 223 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed robbery where a bank teller testified that she believed that defendant had a weapon, that his note indicated that he had a gun, and that she was in fear for her life. Lyons v. State, 942 So. 2d 247 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 269 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied because a reasonable jury could have found from the bank teller's testimony that defendant exhibited a deadly weapon during the robbery, even though no gun was recovered when defendant was detained minutes after the robbery and no gun was visible on the videotape of the robbery. Clayton v. State, 946 So. 2d 796 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 64 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict where a jury heard defendant admit to using a pellet gun in order to rob a clerk at a store of money, cigarettes, and a car; there was testimony that a pellet gun could inflict serious bodily injury; therefore, there was sufficient evidence to support his armed robbery conviction. Thomas v. State, 936 So. 2d 964 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 (Rev. 2000) was affirmed as defendant held a hand behind his back when he first asked for the drugs and the victim later saw defendant's knife; thus, the evidence was sufficient to prove the robbery was procured through the exhibition of a deadly weapon. Yucaitis v. State, 909 So. 2d 166 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Court properly denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict after he was convicted of armed robbery because a store clerk identified defendant as one of her assailants. Clerk also testified as to the presence of a gun. Young v. State, 910 So. 2d 26 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant entered a convenience store with a t-shirt partially covering his face and carrying a knife in his right hand, then stopped when he saw the store clerk on the phone, and fled, the evidence was sufficient to support his conviction for attempted armed robbery. The State failed to prove that the victim was placed in immediate fear by exhibition of a deadly weapon, an essential element of the crime of attempted armed robbery. Dambrell v. State, 905 So. 2d 655 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), reversed by 903 So. 2d 681, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 144 (Miss. 2005).

In reviewing the evidence presented to the jury, the appellate court found that the State presented evidence in accordance with Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, which revealed that defendant intentionally exhibited a deadly weapon which placed the victim in fear of injury, and that defendant took funds from the store; thus, the trial court did not err in its denial of the motion for directed verdict and the appellate court did not find that the verdict was against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Ferguson v. State, 856 So. 2d 334 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery was reversed, as the State presented no objective evidence that defendant possessed a gun at the time of the robbery; assumptions made by the robbery victims that defendant was hiding a gun under a paper bag were not enough to support the conviction. Blue v. State, 827 So. 2d 721 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Teller saw a gun and the jury's guilty verdict could be based on the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness as a reasonable and fair-minded juror could have found the robbery was committed with the aid of a handgun and the evidence was sufficient to convict defendants of armed robbery. Collins v. State, 817 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence was insufficient to support a conviction under this section since no deadly weapon was exhibited or the use of a deadly weapon threatened by the defendant; the defendant approached the victim in a store to make a purchase, the defendant handed the victim a bill, the victim opened the register to make change in response to the purchase, and the defendant grabbed $60.00 dollars and ran, and the only evidence presented by the state with regard to a weapon was that the victim saw part of a kitchen knife in the defendant's pocket. Clark v. State, 756 So. 2d 730 (Miss. 1999).

The evidence did not establish that the defendant exhibited a knife in the course of stealing cash from a store where the state's only proof of the use of a deadly weapon was the clerk's testimony that he noticed what he thought was the handle of a kitchen knife, which was only briefly visible, and the state did not contend that the defendant ever threatened the clerk or brandished the knife in any fashion. Clark v. State, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 161 (Miss. Apr. 22, 1999), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 756 So. 2d 730, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 274 (Miss. 1999).

Evidence was insufficient to show that the defendant stole a truck by exhibiting a deadly weapon where the victim testified that the defendant told him to get out of the truck, that the defendant poked something hard through his jacket pocket into his ribs, and that he assumed that the hard object, which he could not see, was a gun since no imprint of a gun was seen; the defendant did not say to anyone, before or after, that he had a gun, and he did not threaten to shoot anyone. Gibby v. State, 744 So. 2d 244 (Miss. 1999).

Evidence, along with reasonable inferences flowing therefrom, was sufficient to present jury question as to whether defendant exhibited deadly weapon in conjunction with robbery where defendant had under his shirt object which looked like gun and victim testified that she saw prints of gun. Hughey v. State, 512 So. 2d 4 (Miss. 1987).

Testimony from store manager that manager did not touch or restrain person stealing meat from leaving store and area of store by physical force because manager was afraid of pocket knife exhibited by person to manager, apparently for purpose of instilling fear to stop apprehension and pursuit, is sufficient to support conviction for armed robbery. Presley v. State, 474 So. 2d 612 (Miss. 1985).

Where evidence indicated that defendant addressed everyone in a church, demanding that personal valuables be brought down the aisle and placed in front of him, where he was waving and pointing a shotgun all around the church sanctorium, and where individual victims named in the indictment started to comply or intended to comply with the demand for their valuables, the trial court did not err in declining to grant a directed verdict as to five counts of attempted robbery in violation of this section. Smith v. State, 445 So. 2d 227 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution for attempted armed robbery under this section, evidence was sufficient to prove specific intent to rob, within the meaning of the statute, where the uncontradicted evidence indicated that defendant and a partner entered a bank, and defendant pointed a gun at an employee while his partner assaulted other employees, even though both fled before any demand was made for money. Perry v. State, 435 So. 2d 680 (Miss. 1983).

Testimony establishing that defendant jerked bills out of victim's hand and at same time pulled pistol on him justified the jury in finding defendant guilty of armed robbery beyond reasonable doubt. Sykes v. State, 291 So. 2d 697 (Miss. 1974).

Defendant's threat that he would cut victim's heart out, coupled with the menacing gestures with a knife, was enough to instill a disabling apprehension of great personal injury, and defendant's threat that a buddy would be watching in the bank was sufficient to prevent victim from seeking help, and jury was justified in returning a verdict of guilty of armed robbery. Anderson v. State, 285 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 1973).

Proof of the threatening exhibition of a weapon which may be deadly if used is prima facie evidence that it can and will be so used. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

Proof that defendant was armed with a drawn pistol and that victim was thereby compelled to submit to surrender of his goods is sufficient to sustain conviction under this section [Code 1942, § 2367], without direct proof that the pistol was loaded or that its use as a bludgeon was threatened or attempted. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

14. Instructions; generally.

Trial court did not err by refusing a proposed theory-of-the-case instruction because the instruction was redundant. James v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 66 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 11, 2014).

Because the record provided evidence corroborating an accomplice's testimony, the trial court was not required to instruct the jury to regard the accomplice's testimony with great caution and suspicion. James v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 66 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 11, 2014).

Trial court properly refused a requested instruction because, reading all the given instructions together, the jury was fairly, fully, and accurately instructed regarding its duty to consider and weigh the credibility of witness testimony. James v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 66 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 11, 2014).

Trial court properly instructed the jury on the law regarding the use of a deadly weapon element of armed robbery. Furthermore, whether the gun that was used to commit the crime was operable was irrelevant. Flowers v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 17 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 14, 2014).

In defendant's trial on a charge of armed robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, the trial court properly refused defendant's requested circumstantial evidence instruction because there was direct evidence presented, and the case was not a circumstantial-evidence case; the requested instruction was a two-theory instruction. Lewis v. State, 110 So. 3d 814 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 22 (Miss. 2014).

Three defendants' capital-murder convictions were appropriate because, although a limiting instruction given to the jury regarding confessions by defendants was not sufficient, no prejudice or manifest injustice resulted as to any defendant; each of the defendants gave sufficient evidence of his individual participation in the robbery of a gun store in his separate statements to support a capital-murder charge. Anderson v. State, 5 So. 3d 1088 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 171 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 184 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 177 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant and his accomplice had consummated the act of armed robbery before they decided to return defendant's property to him because the offense was complete when they attempted the offense; thus, defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on abandonment of the offense because it was already completed. White v. State, 969 So. 2d 72 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 658 (Miss. 2007).

There was no factual basis to support an instruction that a robbery without a deadly weapon occurred; even if defendant was not the person who actually was holding the weapon, defendant participated in the robbery, and the trial court did not err in denying an instruction for simple robbery. Harrington v. State, 859 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

A trial court's failure to instruct the jurors in an armed robbery prosecution to view accomplices' testimony with caution and suspicion constituted reversible error where there was no physical evidence corroborating the accomplices' testimony, the armed robbery went unsolved for over 5 years, one of the accomplices who testified as a witness was granted absolute immunity in exchange for his testimony and also admitted to committing at least 25 felonies, and the other accomplice had entered a plea of not guilty to the charge of armed robbery, which he confessed to committing in his testimony, and had not yet gone to trial. An instruction given by the trial court directing the jury to consider accomplice testimony with "great care and caution" was insufficient since the difference between being told to exercise "great care" and to regard with "suspicion" is a difference of vast degree; in deleting the requirement to view accomplices' testimony with suspicion, the trial judge effectively diluted the instruction. Wheeler v. State, 560 So. 2d 171 (Miss. 1990).

An instruction that was tantamount to telling the jury that the defendant was present and participated in the robbery was erroneous, because it assumed as true a material fact which the jury alone could find, and the instruction, in its existing form, should not be given at a new trial. Bridgeforth v. State, 498 So. 2d 796 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution for being an accessory before the fact of armed robbery, use of terms usually associated with "conspiracy" in one of the state's instructions was not fatal, especially where any alleged deficiency in the matter of advising the jury of the concepts of aiding and abetting and specific intent was cured by 2 other instructions, as the reviewing court does not examine jury instructions in isolation but, rather, reads all instructions as a whole to determine whether the jury has been correctly instructed. Malone v. State, 486 So. 2d 360 (Miss. 1986).

Instruction to jury on issue of whether gun used in robbery is deadly weapon need not mention that gun is blank starter pistol; such mention would constitute impermissible comment by court on evidence. Duckworth v. State, 477 So. 2d 935 (Miss. 1985).

Robbery defendant is not entitled to jury instruction to effect that eyewitness testimony should be viewed with caution. Robinson v. State, 473 So. 2d 957 (Miss. 1985).

In a prosecution for armed robbery pursuant to this section, the trial court did not err in charging the jury that it could find defendant guilty if it concluded that he had "attempted" to take property from the victim where the statute also prohibited an attempt to commit the crime of robbery, unlike § 97-3-73, relied upon by defendant, which does not include an attempt in the definition of robbery and was not the statute under which defendant was charged. Cooper v. State, 386 So. 2d 1115 (Miss. 1980).

Although defendant's instruction was unartfully drawn, it should have been granted since there was no other instruction clearly showing the required element of asportation essential to prove the crime of robbery. Thomas v. State, 278 So. 2d 469 (Miss. 1973).

Where there was testimony showing that three persons including the accused, acted in concert in committing a robbery, each was responsible and accountable for the wrongful actions of the other two, including the use of a knife during the armed robbery by one of the codefendants, and the trial court was justified in refusing an unarmed robbery instruction requested by the defendant, who did not himself use a knife during the incident. Ivey v. State, 232 So. 2d 368 (Miss. 1970).

Instruction in prosecution for robbery with firearms which makes effort to define reasonable doubt is bad, but not harmful error when by other instructions defendant has obtained fair and full statement of law applicable to case. Passons v. State, 208 Miss. 545, 45 So. 2d 131 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

In robbery prosecution charging defendant with taking a pistol from the person of the prosecuting witness against her will, by putting her in fear of immediate injury to her person by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, trial court erred in not granting defendant's instruction that he could not be convicted of robbery by means of a deadly weapon, where evidence showed that he took pistol from victim by physical force. Newsome v. State, 203 Miss. 449, 35 So. 2d 441 (1948).

Failure of court to grant instruction directing jury to find defendant not guilty in robbery prosecution charging him with taking a pistol from victim by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, where evidence showed that he took pistol by physical force, did not constitute error where the evidence would justify defendant's conviction under Code 1942, § 2362. Newsome v. State, 203 Miss. 449, 35 So. 2d 441 (1948).

While it is improper for the court to instruct the jury as to the court's sentence should the jury fail to assess the death penalty, it is not reversible error where it does not appear that but for such instruction the jury would not have fixed the penalty at death. Boyd v. State, 202 Miss. 509, 32 So. 2d 452 (1947).

Instruction authorizing jury to convict if accused used a pistol and a large dirk knife in perpetrating a robbery was not prejudicial where accused had confessed that he was armed with a pistol, notwithstanding state's attempt to introduce evidence that a specific pistol was used in the robbery was abandoned during the course of the trial. White v. State, 201 Miss. 556, 29 So. 2d 650 (1947).

Court's statement to jury, in prosecution for robbery with deadly weapon, to exclude testimony concerning guns which nobody can identify positively and to consider only testimony concerning dollar bills that have been identified positively as the property of the victim, was held not to be prejudicial error as constituting a commentary upon the weight of the evidence. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

Instruction, in trial for robbery with firearms, to "find the defendant guilty as charged," unless jury fixed punishment at death, held proper. Williamson v. State, 167 Miss. 783, 149 So. 795 (1933).

15. —Intent.

Defendant specifically argued that the indictment made no mention of the intent required for the offense, as it failed to mention that robbery was a specific intent crime. However, use of the word "feloniously" in the indictment under which defendant was charged was sufficient to allege the necessary element of intent. Calhoun v. State, 881 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In an armed robbery prosecution arising from the defendant's taking of guns from 2 law enforcement officers, the defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on self-defense, even though the sum and substance of the defendant's defense was that he took the guns with the purpose of disarming the officers in the midst of what had become a dangerous and heated confrontation in order to extricate himself from harm rather than with the intent to steal, where the jury received no fewer than 5 explanations that the "intent to steal" meant the intent to permanently deprive another of personal property, and therefore a self-defense instruction would have added nothing new to the defendant's theory of the case. Williams v. State, 590 So. 2d 1374 (Miss. 1991).

Armed robbery instruction need not state that taking of property was done with intent to steal, particularly where defendant does not request intent instruction and does not object to instruction actually given. Lannom v. State, 464 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 1985).

Where, after his efforts to return recently purchased shoes were unavailing, defendant drew a pistol and directed the store cashier to give him an amount equal to the purchase price, defendant's alleged good faith in taking the money did not entitle him to a peremptory instruction on the basis that he lacked felonious intent. Wilson v. Wilson, 317 So. 2d 425 (Miss. 1975).

Trial court was correct in refusing defendant's instruction to the effect that the particular intent of the defendant must be one in which substantial gain in money or property was the dominant or primary purpose; the word "substantial" has no place in an instruction on armed robbery, and was calculated to mislead jury. Sykes v. State, 291 So. 2d 697 (Miss. 1974).

16. —Lesser offenses.

Defendant pointed to no evidence by which a jury could find him not guilty of armed robbery and yet guilty of robbery or assault; having found that defendant did not abandon the crime of armed robbery until after its consummation, a lesser-included offense instruction was not warranted. White v. State, 969 So. 2d 72 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 658 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant in armed robbery case was not entitled to an instruction for the lesser offense of attempted larceny by trick even though he claimed that he was attempting to trick the drug dealer out of the money by delivering counterfeit cocaine. Smothers v. State, 761 So. 2d 887 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Trial court did not err in denying request for lesser included offense instructions on simple and aggravated assault where defendant was indicated for armed robbery, jury was instructed concerning lesser-included offenses of robbery and petit larceny, and no rational or reasonable juror could have convicted defendant of merely simple or aggravated assault. Monroe v. State, 515 So. 2d 860 (Miss. 1987).

Armed robbery defendant was properly denied a lesser included offense instruction, in view of his uncontradicted statement regarding his participation in the armed robbery which made him a principal regardless of whether or not he was actually holding a gun. Moore v. State, 493 So. 2d 1295 (Miss. 1986).

17. — Alibi defense.

Where the accused's defense to an armed robbery charge was an alibi, the court did not err in failing to give an instruction which would have placed upon the state the burden of proving that the alibi was untrue. Newton v. State, 229 Miss. 267, 90 So. 2d 375 (1956).

Where the accused's alibi defense to an armed robbery charge was supported by strong testimony of apparently disinterested witnesses while the state's evidence that the accused was the perpetrator was weak, being the testimony of the victim, who, under the circumstances, had only a limited opportunity to observe at the time of the crime, the trial court committed reversible error in failing to instruct that if there was a probability of the accused's innocence, the jury should acquit him; such instruction should have been to the effect that the evidence in support of the alibi need only raise in the minds of the jury reasonable doubt as to the accused's presence at the time and the place of the crime. Newton v. State, 229 Miss. 267, 90 So. 2d 375 (1956).

Accused was entitled to a peremptory instruction where his alibi thoroughly impeached the state's evidence consisting solely of the uncorroborated testimony of an alleged accomplice, a habitual criminal who had not been sentenced although he had plead guilty of the robbery. Pegram v. State, 228 Miss. 860, 89 So. 2d 846 (1956).

18. Conviction of lesser offense.

Where a bank teller testified that defendant went through the bank line, placed a knife on the counter, and demanded money from two tellers, defendant was indicted for armed robbery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79; the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict convicting him of the lesser-included offense of robbery, as when police apprehended defendant he had a steak knife on his person. Wilson v. State, 935 So. 2d 945 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1348, 127 S. Ct. 2047, 167 L. Ed. 2d 780, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 4088, 75 U.S.L.W. 3554 (2007), writ denied by 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171048 (S.D. Miss. Nov. 26, 2012).

Sequestration of the jury was not mandatory in a case where the defendant was indicted for armed robbery, was found guilty by the jury of robbery, as opposed to armed robbery, and was sentenced to 15 years in prison. Griffin v. State, 492 So. 2d 587 (Miss. 1986).

Under the provisions of Code 1942, § 2523, a defendant indicted for armed robbery may properly be tried and convicted for robbery. Auman v. State, 271 So. 2d 427 (Miss. 1973).

In prosecution under indictment charging robbery with deadly weapon accused could be found guilty of robbery without firearms under statute providing accused may be found guilty of lesser offense or other offense necessarily included in offense charged. Bogan v. State, 176 Miss. 655, 170 So. 282 (1936).

In robbery prosecution under indictment charging robbery with deadly weapon, accused could be found guilty of robbery without firearms under statute. Bogan v. State, 176 Miss. 655, 170 So. 282 (1936).

19. Bail.

Both attempted armed robbery and armed robbery constitute the crime of "robbery" under this section, and, therefore, a defendant convicted of attempted armed robbery was not entitled to bail pending appeal as a matter of right, but rather, was subject to the discretion of the court as to bail after the conviction. State v. Maples, 445 So. 2d 540 (Miss. 1984).

In light of the legislative withdrawal of the death penalty from the robbery statute, denial of bail to a defendant charged with armed robbery was improper; denial is appropriate only for capital offenses, and “capital offenses” consist only of those for which the death penalty is permitted. Ex parte Dennis, 334 So. 2d 369 (Miss. 1976).

A defendant charged with armed robbery should be granted bail where the proof of his guilt was not evident or the presumption thereof great on the record. Wooton v. Bethea, 209 Miss. 374, 47 So. 2d 158 (1950).

20. Sentence.

Where defendant was convicted of one count of armed robbery as a habitual offender, the trial court did not err under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 by imposing a 19.5 year sentence because it did not exceed his life expectancy of 20.2 years. Hampton v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 73 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 19, 2013).

Circuit court did not err in sentencing defendant to forty years in prison for armed robbery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 because when the circuit judge announced the sentence, it simultaneously gave defendant credit for all of his pretrial custody time pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-23, which ultimately shortened defendant’s announced sentence to under forty years. Foster v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 135 (Miss. Ct. App. Mar. 26, 2013).

In a post-conviction relief case in which a pro se inmate had pled guilty to armed robbery, he argued unsuccessfully that constitutional rights were violated because he was sentenced to serve a mandatory 10-year sentence without the benefit of earned time. Pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-139(1)(e), an inmate was not eligible for earned-time credit when the inmate had not served the mandatory time required for parole eligibility for a conviction of robbery or attempted robbery with a deadly weapon, and, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-3(1)(d)(ii), he was not eligible for parole since he had been convicted of armed robbery after October 1, 1994. Diggs v. State, 46 So. 3d 361 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 636, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 561 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not err in denying an inmate’s motion for post-conviction collateral relief because the inmate’s sentence was not excessive since it was within the limits of the sentencing guidelines; because the inmate did in fact admit to aiding and abetting an armed robbery with a pistol in his plea colloquy, the trial judge stated that the minimum sentence was three years, and the maximum sentence was life imprisonment for the charge. Cherry v. State, 24 So. 3d 1048 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

The record justified the trial court in giving defendant, a habitual offender, 41 years without parole for three counts of armed robbery; the fact that defendant’s actuarial life-expectancy was 41.7 years did not render the sentence grossly disproportionate in violation of his constitutional rights. Johnson v. State, 29 So. 3d 738 (Miss. 2009).

Where appellant pled guilty to two counts of capital murder and two counts of armed robbery in 1979, he filed several motions for post-conviction relief; the circuit court did not err by dismissing his 2007 motion for post-conviction relief as a successive writ barred by res judicata under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-21(1). Appellant’s claim that he had a fundamental right to be free from an illegal sentence was not good cause for an exception to the bar, because his twenty-four year sentence for armed robbery was within the range set forth in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 and therefore not illegal. Rowland v. State, 42 So. 3d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 42 So. 3d 503, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 386 (Miss. 2010).

In an armed robbery case, defendant was improperly sentenced to life imprisonment as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 because a life sentence had to be, but was not, set by a jury. Carey v. State, 4 So. 3d 370 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 114 (Miss. 2009).

Where a defendant pleaded guilty to aggravated assault under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2) and armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 and was sentenced to consecutive incarcerations of 30 years for the robbery and 10 years for the assault, the trial court properly (1) summarily dismissed the defendant's petition for postconviction relief from the sentence without holding an evidentiary hearing because the defendant was aware that the trial court was not required to follow the State's recommended sentence, and the sentence imposed by the trial court was within statutory guidelines; or (2) finding that the defendant's plea was voluntary because the defendant had read and understood his guilty plea petition, which stated that the trial judge was not required to follow the State's sentencing recommendation. Owens v. State, 996 So. 2d 85 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 685 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 556 U.S. 1212, 129 S. Ct. 2060, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1140, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 3181, 77 U.S.L.W. 3595 (2009).

Where defendant was convicted of armed robbery after he and a cohort approached a home, shot two victims, and fled the scene, his sentence of thirty years' was within the statutory limitations set forth in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Defendant failed to prove that the sentence was unconstitutional, because it did not punish him for exercising his right to trial nor was the sentence disproportionate to his role in the crime. Hughes v. State, 983 So. 2d 270 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1052, 129 S. Ct. 633, 172 L. Ed. 2d 620, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 8544, 77 U.S.L.W. 3324 (2008).

Because a sentence of 15 years with no eligibility for parole, imposed for armed robbery, was within the statutory limits, no error could be found in the trial court's alleged failure to weigh mitigating factors, nor could there be any inference of gross disproportion. Waddell v. State, 999 So. 2d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In an armed robbery case, a motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because defendant's plea was not involuntary or coerced in violation Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04 merely because counsel advised defendant to plead guilty or because defendant feared that he would get a life sentence under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Robinson v. State, 964 So. 2d 609 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant, who was 17 years of age at the time of his conviction and sentence, was sentenced to a 30-year term of imprisonment for armed robbery in accordance with what the state had recommended, and what defendant expected the state to recommend, the trial judge had statutory discretion to sentence defendant to a definite term reasonably expected to be less than life; in challenging his sentence, it was necessary for defendant to make some showing that his sentence exceeded the limits of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, but the sentence defendant received did not exceed the statutory maximum sentence allowed and was therefore legal. Gladney v. State, 963 So. 2d 1217 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in case challenging the legality of a life sentence imposed for two counts of robbery with a deadly weapon because this was a permissible sentence where a jury did not impose the death penalty; the motion was timely, despite being filed about 30 years after the conviction, because an illegal sentence could have been challenged at any time. McLeod v. State, 952 So. 2d 302 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's sentence for armed robbery was proper; 20 years in prison, with 12 years suspended, followed by five years of post-release supervision, was within the sentencing range. Williams v. State, 922 So. 2d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Explanations given to defendant about the nature of the charge, the possible sentences and other consequences of the plea, and the plea bargaining process all pertained to armed robbery, not to simple robbery, and for this reason, defendant's guilty plea was not voluntary in a constitutional sense; nor was defendant accurately informed of the consequences of a guilty plea to robbery where the maximum sentence for armed robbery was life if fixed by the jury, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, and the maximum sentence for simple robbery was 15 years, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-75; when defendant evaluated the state's plea recommendation and made his decision to plead guilty, he was under the erroneous belief that he could be sentenced to life imprisonment were he to proceed to trial and be found guilty, when in fact he could have received only 15 years. Garner v. State, 944 So. 2d 934 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 534 (Miss. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant pled guilty to two counts of armed robbery, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, because his attorney did not give erroneous advice since a life sentence was a possible sentence if a jury had convicted him of both counts; the record showed that defendant actively participated in the robbery, and he knew that people were going to be robbed. Wortham v. State, 952 So. 2d 968 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's petition for post-conviction relief pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-3 as the inmate was properly advised before pleading guilty, he was not deprived of effective assistance of counsel, and his 30 year sentence for armed robbery with 15 years suspended was proper under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Steen v. State, 933 So. 2d 1052 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Circuit court did not err in dismissing a petitioner's request for post-conviction relief because the petitioner's 25-year sentence for armed robbery was within the range prescribed by Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Wells v. State, 936 So. 2d 479 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by not ordering a bifurcated sentencing hearing on the armed robbery because the decision whether or not to order a bifurcated trial rested within the trial court's discretion. Duncan v. State, 939 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2006).

Inmate's petition for post-conviction relief was denied because the denial of the possibility of parole for an armed robbery conviction came from Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-3(1)(d)(ii), not from a trial judge. Hinton v. State, 947 So. 2d 979 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 94 (Miss. 2007).

Because defendant did not address the third prong of the Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277, inquiry, regarding sentences imposed in other jurisdictions, his claim that his 20 year sentence for robbery was excessive was barred Willis v. State, 911 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 2005).

Penalties set forth in the armed robbery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, and the controlled substances statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139, were clearly distinguishable where the specific requirement that a trial court's sentence be limited to a definite term, reasonably expected to be less than life, was applicable to an armed robbery conviction but did not apply to all crimes; therefore, the trial court did not have to consider defendant's life expectancy for the conviction of unlawful delivery of methamphetamine and unlawful possession of more than thirty grams of methamphetamine with intent to distribute. Cannon v. State, 919 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2005).

During the plea hearing, defendant acknowledged that he was a participant in the armed robbery, and described the events of the robbery; the court interlineated the simple robbery petition indicating "armed" robbery and initialed the modification. Defendant was sentenced to a term of fifteen years with ten years to serve, five years suspended and post-release supervision of five years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Correction. Baldwin v. State, 923 So. 2d 218 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 141 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's robbery sentence was appropriate pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 because it was within the statutory limit. Further, it was not grossly disproportionate to the crime of which he was convicted. White v. State, 919 So. 2d 1029 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant contended that his sentence was excessive because his cohorts to the armed robbery were given lesser sentences, and the sentence that he received exceeded the punishment prescribed for the crime of accessory after the fact. However, his sentence was well within the statutory guidelines for the offense he pled guilty to (armed robbery), and it was not subject to review. Sykes v. State, 895 So. 2d 191 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's 35-year sentence after he was convicted of armed robbery was proper under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 where the sentence was within the statutory guidelines and the trial court had not abused its discretion in considering pending charges during sentencing. Banks v. State, 912 So. 2d 1061 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 681 (Miss. 2005).

Upon appellant's plea of guilty to one count of armed robbery, the trial court did not err in sentencing him to fourteen years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections, with seven years suspended. The circuit court properly considered appellant's age, lack of criminal history, and similar cases. Edmond v. State, 906 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where appellant pled guilty to the armed robbery of a fast food restaurant, and his accomplice pled guilty to conspiracy to commit armed robbery for driving the "getaway car;" the trial court did not err in sentencing appellant to seven years while his accomplice only received an effective sentence of one year. The men performed different tasks in the crime. Edmond v. State, 906 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, a person found guilty of armed robbery had to be imprisoned for life in the state penitentiary if the penalty was so fixed by the jury. Defendant, however, was sentenced by the circuit judge after entering a plea of guilty, and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 did not provide for a maximum sentence of life for armed robbery when the sentence was imposed by a judge rather than a jury; thus, where defendant had no prior felonies, and contrary to the State's argument that defendant's sentence was illegal, the circuit judge had the statutory authority, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-33, to suspend defendant's sentence (in the case at bar, 9 years of defendant's 10 year sentence was suspended, subject to a term of supervised probation), to the extent that the ends of justice and the best interest of the public, as well as defendant, would be served thereby. State v. Hayes, 887 So. 2d 184 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, the trial judge had the authority to impose any sentence but life imprisonment. Thus, defendant's sentence of 40 years was within the limits prescribed by statute and did not constitute cruel and inhuman treatment; further, the sentence was within the purview of the trial judge to impose, since he had adjudged defendant's remaining life expectancy to be 42 years. Calhoun v. State, 881 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where jury could not reach an agreement on a sentence for defendant whom they had found guilty of armed robbery, the trial judge did not demonstrate any bias by sentencing defendant to 25 years, as Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 provided the judge could fix the sentence for any term not less than three years. Jack v. State, 878 So. 2d 1078 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Inmate's sentence after pleading guilty to a charge of armed robbery was proper where the record constituted sufficient evidence to show that the inmate was properly advised as to the minimum and maximum sentence prior to entering his plea; further, three years was the minimum sentence for armed robbery and a person convicted of armed robbery could not receive a wholly suspended sentence as the inmate alleged that his attorney told him. Mullins v. State, 859 So. 2d 1082 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and arson were proper but defendant's robbery sentence was reversed; the State agreed with defendant's contention that his life expectancy was not 39.6 years because the life expectancy for a 43-year-old black male was 30.6 years. Payton v. State, 897 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 2003).

Consecutive sentences of 30 and 45 years for armed carjacking and armed robbery were within the statutory limits for those offenses and were not excessive despite the length of the sentences and regardless of the fact that defendant chose to go to trial rather than accept a plea bargain for 10 years on each count as his co-defendants elected to do. McCline v. State, 856 So. 2d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 860 So. 2d 315, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 722 (Miss. 2003).

Evidence that defendant pointed a gun at two store clerks, demanded money, and took money from the cash register drawer and the clerks' purses, supported imposition of consecutive sentences of 30 years and 10 years against a defendant convicted of two counts of armed robbery; sentences were within the maximum range set forth in Miss. Code Ann. § 79-3-79 [Repealed] and were neither cruel or unusual under either the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States or Miss. Const. art. 3, § 28 nor disproportionate to the offenses committed. Womack v. State, 827 So. 2d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

There was no indication in the record that the trial judge enhanced the sentence of one defendant over the other, and the sentences were all well within the statutory limits for armed robbery, aggravated assault and accessory after the fact. Birkley v. State, 750 So. 2d 1245 (Miss. 1999).

The defendant's 25 year sentence fell within the guidelines of this section, was not excessive, and did not violate his Sixth and Fourteenth amendment rights, notwithstanding the defendant's assertion that he was merely an accessory after the fact; the trial judge found no reason to suspend any of the sentence and the defendant had a previous conviction for burglary of an occupied dwelling. Lawson v. State, 748 So. 2d 96 (Miss. 1999).

The sentence imposed by the trial judge was within the statutory limits of the statute and was not disturbed on appeal where the jury was unable to agree on the penalty of imprisonment for life and the trial court thus considered the actuarial tables and used his authority to sentence the defendant to serve 35 years in the state penitentiary, one year less than his life sentence. Lenox v. State, 727 So. 2d 753 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

The court rejected the contention that the defendant's 15 year sentence was an illegal life sentence because it was handed down by a judge, not a jury, and the judge had no knowledge of the defendant's HIV status or his life expectancy. Lindsay v. State, 720 So. 2d 182 (Miss. 1998).

Sentence for crime of armed robbery of 20 years with 11 years suspended was within guidelines of statute requiring sentence of any term not less than 3 years, and was not subject to Supreme Court review, despite asserted presence of mitigating factors. Jones v. State, 669 So. 2d 1383 (Miss. 1995).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, it was not error for the trial judge to fail to accept the State's sentencing recommendation, even though the State agreed to make the recommendation in exchange for a guilty plea and the defendant's agreement to testify against his co-indictees, where the judge did not participate in the plea bargaining discussion between the defendant and the State, and the judge and the defense attorney informed the defendant that the State's sentence recommendation was not binding on the court. Martin v. State, 635 So. 2d 1352 (Miss. 1994).

The fact that a defendant pled guilty to armed robbery in exchange for a 7-year sentence did not broaden the circuit court's sentencing authority; it was still statutorily limited. Mitchell v. State, 561 So. 2d 1037 (Miss. 1990).

Judge acted within his discretion when he modified defendant's 25 year sentence to 3 years in prison followed by 5 years probation; contention was rejected that § 47-7-33 provided exclusive procedure in that suspension of sentence under its term could not be combined with requirement that any part of same sentence be served. Marshall v. Cabana, 835 F.2d 1101 (5th Cir. 1988).

Upon a prima facie showing of the existence of an advance plea agreement between the state and a codefendant who was state's principal witness, whereby in exchange for testifying for the state the codefendant would receive a lenient sentence for armed robbery, a defendant, who had been convicted for the same robbery as accessory before the fact, may be entitled to post-conviction relief where the agreement had not been disclosed prior to his trial, although the defense had made a general discovery request for exculpatory material, and the existence of any such agreement had been denied by the codefendant while testifying at the defendant's trial. Case would be remanded to circuit court for evidentiary hearing. Malone v. State, 486 So. 2d 367 (Miss. 1986).

Three years imprisonment is the most lenient lawful sentence for armed robbery.

Malone v. State, 486 So. 2d 367 (Miss. 1986).

Imposition of 40 years imprisonment under habitual offender statute (§ 99-19-81), which cannot be reduced or suspended and for which defendant cannot be eligible for probation or parole, upon conviction for armed robbery based on theft of meat during which defendant displayed pocket knife to avoid apprehension will be vacated, and additional sentence hearing and resentencing required, where adequate presentencing hearing was not held, even though trial judge afforded every opportunity to defendant and counsel to present mitigating evidence at that hearing. Presley v. State, 474 So. 2d 612 (Miss. 1985).

In a prosecution for armed robbery in which the jury failed to fix the penalty at life imprisonment, the trial court did not exceed its authority in imposing a sentence of 40 years where the defendant had an actuarial life expectancy of 40.51 years. Ware v. State, 410 So. 2d 1330 (Miss. 1982).

Where it appeared that the trial court, in sentencing a 16-year-old defendant convicted of armed robbery to a term of 14 years in state prison, had been under the misapprehension that this section and § 47-7-3, read together, mandated a sentence of at least 10 years in the state penitentiary, absent a jury verdict of life imprisonment, the case would be remanded to the court for a clarification of the sentencing since there was no way to ascertain whether the trial court had considered the statutory alternative for sentencing minor offenders under the provisions of § 43-21-159(3). Bougon v. State, 405 So. 2d 101 (Miss. 1981).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, a sentence of 12 years in prison, without eligibility of parole for 10 years, imposed upon a 14-year-old mentally retarded defendant did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment; however, the case would be remanded to the trial court for consideration of alternative sentencing under § 43-21-159 where the trial judge should have placed in the record the sources and facts of his sentence study and should have permitted the defendant's attorney to introduce evidence of the presence of absence of facilities at the Mississippi State Penitentiary for the care of the defendant, and the availability of other institutions or facilities which could be utilized by the defendant. May v. State, 398 So. 2d 1331 (Miss. 1981).

The trial court in an armed robbery prosecution erred in sentencing defendant to a 75 year term of imprisonment where the jury did not fix the penalty at imprisonment for life; under this section, a trial court cannot impose a sentence of life when the jury has failed to do so. Stewart v. State, 372 So. 2d 257 (Miss. 1979).

The imposition of a life sentence is within the sole province of the jury, and it was thus error for the trial court to impose a life sentence on defendant, convicted of armed robbery, where the jury returned a verdict finding defendant "guilty as charged," but did not fix penalty as life imprisonment. Parker v. State, 367 So. 2d 456 (Miss. 1979).

Where the jury fails to fix the penalty at death, the sentence of the court is an exercise of discretion, and a sentence of life imprisonment is within his discretion. Flegg v. State, 202 Miss. 179, 30 So. 2d 615 (1947).

21. Miscellaneous.

Defendant was properly convicted of armed robbery because the evidence supported the jury's finding that defendant was the man who robbed a bank despite misinformation regarding the robber's color, the search of defendant's house and seizure of a gun fell within the Fourth Amendment's protective-sweep exception, and the trial court properly refused defendant's insanity-defense instruction. Hutto v. State, 114 So. 3d 802 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Motion for a new trial was denied in a case where defendant was identified as the perpetrator in an armed robbery by the victim and another witness; defendant was picked from a photo lineup after a description was given to police of a robber, the victim had observed the robber's face for four minutes, and the victim testified that he would not forget the face of the robber. Brownlee v. State, 972 So. 2d 31 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Motion for a directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied in an armed robbery case under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 because the photo lineup was not impermissibly suggestive where other men could have had the same hairstyle, the victim had four minutes to look at the perpetrator's face during the crime, and the victim testified that he would never forget the perpetrator's face. Moreover, the evidence from the identification was for the jury to weigh. Brownlee v. State, 972 So. 2d 31 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Testimony of accomplice, which was partially corroborated by fellow inmate of defendant and by state's ballistics expert, presented question of fact to be determined by jury as to whether defendant was guilty of robbery and subsequent shooting of store clerk. Brown v. State, 682 So. 2d 340 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1127, 117 S. Ct. 1271, 137 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1997).

Although a special venire could have been demanded in an armed robbery prosecution if the demand had been timely made, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the defendant's motion for a special venire where the motion was made just prior to the start of trial. Williams v. State, 590 So. 2d 1374 (Miss. 1991).

Initiation of criminal proceedings in justice court did not preclude circuit court in another county retaining jurisdiction and conducting case to conclusion after dismissal by justice court; courts in both counties had concurrent jurisdiction, since portion of crimes occurred in each county. Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

The prosecution of a defendant for robbery with a deadly weapon after a prior conviction for kidnapping arising from the same incident was not barred by double jeopardy since the crimes of armed robbery and kidnapping required different elements of proof. Brock v. State, 530 So. 2d 146 (Miss. 1988).

Absent a recommendation of the jury for a life sentence, imposition of such sentence on the defendant convicted of armed robbery, and sentenced as an habitual criminal, was error. Watkins v. State, 500 So. 2d 462 (Miss. 1987).

Armed robbery conviction and sentence was affirmed on certificate of appeal, where the defendant, who had escaped from jail during pendency of the appeal, failed to file a transcript, and the return day had long since passed. Nealy v. State, 493 So. 2d 1294 (Miss. 1986).

Trial court committed reversible error by preventing armed robbery defendant, who contended another had committed the crime, from asking questions, in jury's presence, concerning such other person's description and characteristics, of a witness, an accused accessory, who, out of jury's presence, had refused, on self-incrimination grounds, to answer questions concerning the robbery, but had answered questions concerning the description of the other person. Hall v. State, 490 So. 2d 858 (Miss. 1986).

Trial court may refuse to grant motion for severance filed by defendant in prosecution for robbery with deadly weapon where there does not appear to be conflict of interest among codefendant and evidence introduced at trial does not go more to guilt of one defendant than to other. Duckworth v. State, 477 So. 2d 935 (Miss. 1985).

Comment by prosecuting attorney in argument that he will read defendant's confession "as this statement is the only way we hear from him" is harmless comment on failure of defendant to testify when there is no dispute about facts in connection with crime or who committed it. Bramlett v. State, 37 So. 2d 305 (Miss. 1948).

Refusal to grant mistrial in prosecution for robbery with a deadly weapon on ground that one of the arresting officers stated on direct examination that they already had defendant "under investigation before this," whereupon prosecutor interposed question calling for repetition of such statement, did not constitute reversible error, where objection to prosecutor's question was promptly sustained. Cittadino v. State, 199 Miss. 235, 24 So. 2d 93 (1945).

Where defendant, who was indicted on charge of robbery with a deadly weapon, before case was called for trial, filed motion for issuance of special venire facias, overruling of motion, if erroneous, was rendered harmless by subsequent reduction of grade of offense to one of mere felonious robbery, upon district attorney's motion, and subsequent trial of defendant on that charge, since mere felonious robbery is not a capital offense. Mosley v. State, 174 So. 240 (Miss. 1937).

In robbery prosecution, defendants' guilt of assault held for jury. Anderson v. State, 168 Miss. 424, 151 So. 558 (1934).

22. Double jeopardy.

Defendant was placed in double jeopardy when he was convicted on two counts of armed robbery and two counts of capital murder for killing while engaged in the commission of those same two armed robberies; although there were several other armed robbery victims present, only the two murder victims were named in the indictment. Rowland v. State, 98 So. 3d 1032 (Miss. Oct. 4, 2012).

In a case in which defendant appealed the dismissal of his motion for post-conviction relief, he argued unsuccessfully that he was subjected to double jeopardy because he was charged with armed robbery on three occasions: (1) in Count II of his indictment, (2) in Count IV of his indictment, and (3) when he pled guilty to the charge of armed robbery. The State filed an Order of Nolle Prosequi on Counts I, II, III, and V; therefore, the burglary charge in Count II was passed to the file, and defendant was no longer charged with nor convicted of Count II. Ewing v. State, 34 So. 3d 612 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 245 (Miss. 2010).

Offenses of kidnapping under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-53 and armed robbery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79 were clearly separate and distinct, with each requiring proof of additional facts the other did not; kidnapping, for example, required proof of intent to cause such person to be secretly confined or imprisoned against their will, whereas armed robbery did not, and armed robbery required the taking of personal property of another, but kidnapping did not. Thus, the crimes were separate and distinct regardless of their temporal overlap or their arising from a common nucleus of operative facts, and defendant's double jeopardy rights were not violated through being convicted of both kidnapping and armed robbery. Moore v. State, 938 So. 2d 1254 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 750 (Miss. Oct. 5, 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 749 (Miss. 2006).

Burglary conviction was upheld where acquittal on armed robbery charges did not invoke double jeopardy concerns because defendant was not previously tried for either of the charges and because the burglary charge did not contain the same elements, such as exhibiting a deadly weapon and putting the victim in fear; similarly, the burglary included elements not found in armed robbery, such as breaking and entering. Smallwood v. State, 930 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Inmate's convictions for aggravated assault and aggravated robbery did not violate his Fifth Amendment right to be free from double jeopardy because even though the charges arose from the same set of facts, the two charges had different elements that the State needed to prove and one was not a lesser-included offense of the other. Thomas v. State, 930 So. 2d 1264 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant robbed the victim, a store clerk, at gunpoint, and pistol whipped the victim numerous times, the offenses of robbery with the use of a deadly weapon, and aggravated assault clearly required different elements of proof, and double jeopardy did not apply. Houston v. State, 887 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 888 So. 2d 1177, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1448 (Miss. 2004).

Conspiracy to commit armed robbery required only agreement among two or more people to commit the crime, while armed robbery, required the use of a deadly weapon which placed an individual in fear of immediate injury. Actual robbery required the establishment of several different facts than the agreement to commit the act; thus, the offenses were two separate crimes and defendant was not subjected to double jeopardy by convictions for both. Stovall v. State, 873 So. 2d 1056 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Convictions for armed carjacking and armed robbery occurring during the same episode did not constitute double jeopardy where the carjacking charge was based on the taking of a delivery truck and the robbery charge was based on the theft of money from one of the occupants of the truck. McCline v. State, 856 So. 2d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 860 So. 2d 315, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 722 (Miss. 2003).

23. Verdict.

Defendants were properly convicted of armed robbery because the form of the verdict constituted an intelligent answer to the issues submitted to the jury and allowed the jury's intent to be understood in a reasonably clear manner. James v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 66 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 11, 2014).

24. Jury.

Defendants were properly convicted of armed robbery because defendants did not fail to receive a fair and impartial trial due to juror misconduct. James v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 66 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 11, 2014).

§ 97-3-81. Robbery; threatening letter demanding money, property.

Every person who shall knowingly send or deliver, or shall make, and, for the purpose of being sent or delivered, shall part with the possession of any letter or writing with or without a name subscribed thereto, or signed with a fictitious name, or with any letter, mark, or other designation, threatening therein to accuse any person of a crime or to do any injury to the person or property of any one, with a view or intent to extort or gain money or property of any description belonging to another, shall be guilty of an attempt to rob, and shall, on conviction be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five years.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

An action seeking to recover for the use of threats of criminal prosecution, in a letter, to enforce the payment of a purported civil debt, which the plaintiff charged was in violation of Code § 1942, § 2365, was barred by the statute of limitations applicable to an action for menace, the complaint having been filed more than a year after the letter was received. Dennis v. Travelers Ins. Co., 234 So. 2d 624 (Miss. 1970).

Under statute making it an offense for one to knowingly part with possession of letter threatening to accuse any person of a crime or to do any injury to the person or property of anyone, with view or intent to extort or gain money or property, indictment charging that defendant wrote instrument informing addressee to leave house and place money under front doorstep, and not to return until certain time, and stating that addressee would be watched from time she left home until she returned, held defective, since it failed to charge that defendant parted with writing and writing did not contain threat. Smith v. State, 177 Miss. 731, 172 So. 132 (1937).

Creditor is entitled to demand payment of honest debts, and a threat to charge the debtor with an offense committed in connection with the debt or obligation is not within the statute. State v. Ricks, 108 Miss. 7, 66 So. 281, Am. Ann. Cas. 1917E,244 (1914).

§ 97-3-82. Extortion; definitions; offense and penalties.

(1) For the purposes of this section the following words and phrases shall have the meanings ascribed herein, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise:

(a) “Obtain” means: (i) in relation to property, to bring about a transfer or purported transfer of a legal interest in, or physical possession of, the property, whether to the obtainer or another; or (ii) in relation to labor or service, or any reward, favor, or advantage of any kind, to secure performance thereof; or attempt to do (i) or (ii).

(b) “Property” means anything of value, including, but not limited to, real estate, tangible and intangible personal property, contract rights, choses-in-action, reputation of a person and other interests in or claims to wealth, admission or transportation tickets, captured or domestic animals, food and drink, electric or other power.

(c) “Property of another” includes property in which any person other than the actor has an interest which the actor is not privileged to infringe, regardless of the fact that the actor also has an interest in the property and regardless of the fact that the other person might be precluded from civil recovery because the property was used in an unlawful transaction or was subject to forfeiture as contraband. Property in possession of the actor shall not be deemed property of another who has only a security interest therein, even if legal title is in the creditor pursuant to a conditional sales contract or other security agreement.

(d) “Public official” means any person elected or appointed to any office, position or employment whereby the person is paid a fee or salary by the State of Mississippi or any political subdivision thereof or any agency or subdivision of the government of the United States, regardless of the source or sources of the funds for the payment.

(2) A person is guilty of extortion if he purposely obtains or attempts to obtain property of another or any reward, favor, or advantage of any kind by threatening to inflict bodily injury on any person or by committing or threatening to commit any other criminal offense, violation of civil statute, or the public or private revelation of information not previously in the public domain for the purpose of humiliating or embarrassing the other person, without regard to whether the revelation otherwise constitutes a violation of a specific statute.

(3)(a) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection, any person, whether a public official or not, who commits the offense of extortion of property or things of value of another under the value of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six (6) months.

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection, any person, whether a public official or not, who commits the offense of extortion of property or things of value of another of the value of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or more shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by commitment to the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed fifteen (15) years.

(c) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection, any person, whether a public official or not, who commits the offense of extortion in order to obtain any intangible reward, favor or advantage to which no monetary value is normally given shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by commitment to the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed fifteen (15) years.

(d) Any public official acting in his official capacity or under color of his office who commits the offense of extortion in order to obtain any intangible reward, favor or advantage to which no monetary value is normally given, or who commits the offense of extortion of tangible property, regardless of the value of the property, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by commitment to the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not less than two (2) nor more than twenty (20) years.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

First Amendment precluded imposition of liability on participants in economic boycott, even though some of them engaged in violence and threats contributed to success of boycott, because boycott was otherwise nonviolent, politically motivated, and designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by Constitution itself; however, First Amendment did not bar recovery from those who engaged in violence or threats of violence for losses proximately caused by their unlawful conduct. 1. In general; construction.

Defendant's conviction and sentence for the sexual battery of a minor child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-3-95(1)(d) and 97-3-97(a) was proper where his motion to suppress was rightfully denied since intoxication did not automatically render his confession involuntary. He failed to show symptoms of being under the influence and the record indicated that he was given his Miranda warnings and asked questions. Morris v. State, 913 So. 2d 432 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper where the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for funds because his argument that DNA testing could have shown consent or lack of force was without merit. The evidence would not have been at all probative on the issue of consent, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a) Brink v. State, 888 So. 2d 437 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ

Lack of consent is essential fact necessary to constitute crime of sexual battery. Peterson v. State, 671 So. 2d 647 (Miss. 1996).

This section creates three separate classes of victims. Thus, in a prosecution for sexual battery of a child under the age of 14, the defendant was not entitled to an instruction containing the element "without her consent." Ryan v. State, 525 So. 2d 799 (Miss. 1988).

Although, on its face, the definition of sexual penetration announced in § 97-3-97 encompasses any penetration, the parameters of the definition of sexual penetration are logically confined to activities which are the product of sexual behavior or libidinal gratification, not merely the product of clinical examination or domestic, parental functions. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

Attempted sexual battery is a criminal offense by virtue of Mississippi Code § 97-1-7. Gill v. State, 485 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. 1986).

2. Validity; constitutionality.

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 was held not to be unconstitutionally vague in a sexual battery case where the inmate admitted that he knew that raping an 11-year-old girl was wrong, but he did it anyway. Calhoun v. State, 849 So. 2d 892 (Miss. 2003).

This section is not unconstitutionally vague since, as applied to a male adult who allegedly stuck his finger into the vagina of a 10-year-old girl, the statute gives fair notice to a person of ordinary intelligence that the defendant's alleged conduct is forbidden, and there are no indications that the statute encourages erratic arrest and convictions. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

The absence of explicit mens rea language in this section does not render the statute unconstitutional, since the legislature may define a crime which depends on no mental elements and consists only of forbidden acts or omissions. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

3. Applicability.

A teacher in a school that a child of the required age attends has a position of trust or authority over the child sufficient to fit within the meaning of the statute, and there is nothing in the statute that would limit the meaning to a student who is in a specific class of the teacher. Carter v. State, 775 So. 2d 91 (Miss. 1999).

Statute was not applied ex post facto to defendant where subsection (c), under which he was prosecuted, was added to statute to be effective from and after March 29, 1983, and incident giving rise to prosecution occurred in August, 1983. Cantrell v. State, 507 So. 2d 325 (Miss. 1987).

Where defendant's 19-year-old daughter testified at trial that she and defendant had engaged in acts of fellatio and cunnilingus, defendant was properly indicted under § 97-29-59, and not § 97-3-95 et seq., which were enacted subsequent to the violation for which he was convicted, in that § 97-3-103 expressly provides that the sexual battery statutes do not repeal, modify or amend any other criminal statute. Contreras v. State, 445 So. 2d 543 (Miss. 1984).

4. Elements.

For purposes of a new trial, a guilty verdict in a sexual battery case was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because it was up to a jury to assess the reliability of a victim's sister, who testified on the issue of penetration; moreover, even though defendant's seminal fluid on the victim's body did not prove penetration, the testimony of the sister and of police detectives regarding defendant's admission of other instances of oral sex established that element of the crime. Singleton v. State, 16 So. 3d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a sexual battery case under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(2) where penetration was an issue, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied because it was up to a jury to determine the credibility of a victim's sister, who testified that she saw defendant sticking his tongue in between the victim's vagina; also, defendant admitted to other instances of oral sex performed by the victim. Singleton v. State, 16 So. 3d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Court of appeals erred when it reversed defendant's conviction for molestation where molestation was a lesser included offense of sexual battery; defendant's actions were done with the purpose of gratifying his lust, and the victim was under the age of 14 at the time of the incident, and defendant's acts of grabbing the victim, touching her genital area, and touching himself, demonstrated that he was gratifying his lust, and intent could be inferred from a defendant's actions. Friley v. State, 879 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. 2004).

Court properly denied defendant's motion for post-conviction relief after defendant pled guilty to sexual battery; trial counsel did not provide erroneous advice in advising defendant that the 14-year-old victim's consent was not an issue for the jury to address. Under the plain language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), the State would not have had to address the issue of consent; State would have only had to show that the victim was between the ages of 14 and 16, that defendant was more than 36 months older than the victim, and that defendant had engaged in sexual penetration with the victim. Bates v. State, 879 So. 2d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

State provided proof of sexual penetration of a child victim where the victim testified that she performed oral sex on defendant after defendant bought her some candy and defendant's niece testified that she saw the victim put defendant's penis in her mouth. Williams v. State, 859 So. 2d 1046 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The requirement of evidence of libidinal gratification or sexual behavior relates only to subsection (1)(c) of this section, which deals with sexual penetration of a child, and does not relate to sexual penetration without consent under subsection (1)(a) of this section. Puckett v. State, 737 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 1999).

Lustful intent is not an element of sexual battery that needs to be proven under subsection (1)(c) of this section. Watts v. State, 733 So. 2d 214 (Miss. 1999).

Contact between person's mouth, lips, or tongue and genitals of person's body, whether by kissing, licking, or sucking, is "sexual penetration," regardless of gender of victim or perpetrator. Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Force or reasonable apprehension of force are not necessary elements of the crime of sexual battery under this section. Sanders v. State, 586 So. 2d 792 (Miss. 1991).

The absence of explicit mens rea language in this section does not render the statute unconstitutional, since the legislature may define a crime which depends on no mental elements and consists only of forbidden acts or omissions. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

The testimony of the 10-year-old female sexual battery victim, and the admission of the defendant of inserting his finger into the victim's vagina under circumstances suggesting a lustful or licentious state of mind, represents sufficient evidence of the defendant's intent to violate the statute. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

Conviction for sexual battery will be reversed on appeal where appellate court's study of record discloses no evidence of penetration as charged in indictment and required by this section. Thompson v. State, 468 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1985).

5. Defenses.

Defendant was not prejudiced by the amendment of an indictment for Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d) sexual battery that deleted the words "without her consent," because a child under the age of 14 had no legal ability to consent to such an act thus the language had no legal meaning as it was not an element of the crime and its removal had not deprived defendant of a valid defense. Lee v. State, 944

So. 2d 56 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), affirmed by 944 So. 2d 35, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's motion for a new trial after a conviction for sexual battery without consent was properly denied because the verdict was not against the great weight of the evidence; a victim's testimony was adequately corroborated by another person present in the room, and the question of whether the victim's inaction constituted consent (the minor victim was intoxicated and was afraid to object) was a question for the jury. Seigfried v. State, 869 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 870 So. 2d 666, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 352 (Miss. 2004).

That 15-year-old victim's character was less than sterling was not a defense to sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), and was therefore neither relevant nor material. Kearley v. State, 843 So. 2d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), writ of certiorari denied by 842 So. 2d 578, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 410 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The defense of mistake of age is not available to a charge of sexual battery. Todd v. State, 806 So. 2d 1086 (Miss. 2001).

Consent is a defense to a charge of sexual battery committed with a person 14 years of age and over. Coates v. State, 495 So. 2d 464 (Miss. 1986).

While consent is a defense to a charge of sexual battery committed with a person 14 years of age and over, jury had before it substantial credible evidence upon which to base its finding that the prosecutrix had been threatened and did not voluntarily consent. Coates v. State, 495 So. 2d 464 (Miss. 1986).

6. Indictment.

Even if defendant had timely objected to the indictment alleging the expiration of the statute of limitations for the first two years of the indictment's time span, the circuit court's solution would have been to amend the indictment to reflect a time period not in conflict with any alleged statute of limitations issues, which was essentially done when defense counsel requested and was granted jury instructions that limited the time span for the offenses to 15 months that were within the statute of limitations. Hines v. State, 126 So. 3d 985 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

In a case where defendant was convicted of statutory rape and of sexual battery of a child, although the indictment listed a four-year time span in which the offenses occurred, because defense counsel requested and was granted jury instructions limiting that time span to 15 months during which defendant was in contact with the children, the 15-month time span in which the offenses allegedly occurred was not unreasonably large for defendant to be on notice as to the crimes charged and was not unreasonably large so as to prevent defendant from defending himself. Hines v. State, 126 So. 3d 985 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's indictment was sufficient even though the sexual battery counts initially tracked the wrong subsection of the sexual battery statute because the indictment specifically alleged that defendant abused his fourteen-year-old daughter and included his birthday, the daughter's birthday, and the dates of the alleged crimes; the amendment to the indictment to reflect the appropriate subsection was one of form. Weeks v. State, 123 So. 3d 373 (Miss. 2013).

Indictment charged defendant with one count of touching a child for lustful purposes pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1) and one count of sexual battery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and the crimes formed a common scheme of sexual misconduct and all the crimes occurred over a period of time against the same victim in a similar manner; thus, the court rejected defendant's claim that it was error for him to be tried on a multi-count indictment, for purposes of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-2, plus the court noted that the trial court instructed the jury to evaluate each count separately and return separate verdicts. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where each count of the indictment specifically stated that defendant did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously commit sexual battery by some form of sexual penetration or performing cunnilingus on the victim while defendant was above the age of eighteen and the victim was under the age of sixteen, the indictment was not fatally flawed because it tracked the language of both subsections (c) and (d) of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1). The indictment included the birth date of both defendant and the victim as well as the time of the alleged offense; the fact that it mistakenly referred to the victim as being under the age of sixteen instead of fourteen was irrelevant. Smith v. State, 989 So. 2d 973 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Indictment for fondling and sexual battery was not defective for failing to provide the specific dates that the offenses occurred, as the state had narrowed the time frame sufficiently to put defendant on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

Denial of the inmate's motion for post-conviction relief was proper in part because the indictment was sufficient to charge a crime since it alleged that he engaged in sexual penetration with the victim against her will; thus, the indictment was sufficient to charge the crime of sexual battery. Knight v. State, 959 So. 2d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 964 So. 2d 508, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 538 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant was properly convicted of sexually battery by digital penetration where sufficient proof showed that defendant was provided notice that he was being charged with sexual battery, and the variance between the language of the indictment and proof at trial was not a fatal error under Miss. Const. art. 3, § 26. Burrows v. State, 961 So. 2d 701 (Miss. 2007).

Although rape required forcible sexual intercourse, and sexual battery required sexual penetration without consent, the indictment specifically put defendant on notice that he was charged with forcibly inserting his sexual organ inside the victim's rectum; his defense to that charge was not that it happened and was consensual, but that it did not happen, and therefore his defense to the original indictment was equally applicable to amended indictment, which changed a charge from rape to sexual battery. Goodin v. State, 977 So. 2d 353 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), affirmed in part and reversed in part by, remanded by 977 So. 2d 338, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 143 (Miss. 2008).

Although defendant argued that the indictment failed to expressly charge that he penetrated the victim with lustful intent, neither Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 nor Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a) required proof of lustful intent; defendant's claim as to the sufficiency of the dates alleged in the indictment was waived for failure to demur the indictment in the court below. Frei v. State, 934 So. 2d 318 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a sexual battery case, the indictment was properly amended by the removal of the phrase "without her consent," because the defense to the charge did not change, and although defendant might have asserted that he was surprised, his surprise could not be characterized as unfair; the net effect of the amendment was that defendant only had to defend one claim, rather than two. Lee v. State, 944 So. 2d 35 (Miss. 2006).

Where the state dismissed one indictment for sexual battery in exchange for defendant's guilty plea to gratification of lust, it was not a dismissal based on it being defective; however, even if it had been, the second indictment was sufficient to charge a crime where it alleged that defendant engaged in sexual penetration with a child under the age of 14 against her will. Knight v. State, 956 So. 2d 264 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), substituted opinion at 959 So. 2d 598, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 444 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant argued that his indictment should have stated that the penetration was knowingly or intentionally committed; however, sexual battery was not a specific intent crime and thus the indictment did not have to refer to a specific intent, and the indictment was valid. Jones v. State, 936 So. 2d 993 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court properly refused to merge two counts of an indictment charging defendant with sexual battery because the two counts alleged two separate acts of penetration; the first count charged that defendant inserted his tongue into the victim's vagina, while the second count charged that defendant inserted his penis into the victim's vagina. Hill v. State, 929 So. 2d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Denial of the inmate's petition for post-conviction relief was proper where, although the indictment was defective for failing to allege the inmate's age, he suffered no prejudice from that defect. Clearly he was more than 24 months older than the victim of the sexual battery when the offenses were committed and he knew that he was 24 months older than she was when he read the indictment and entered his guilty plea. Robinson v. State, 904 So. 2d 203 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where consent was not an element of sexual battery of a girl under the age of 14 under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), the indictment was not fatal for failing to state that the 11-year-old victim had not consented to the offense; thus, the indictment did not present grounds for post-conviction relief. Bryant v. State, 879 So. 2d 530 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

An indictment for sexual battery was inadequate where there were no words relating to consent and no overt act was alleged indicating the manner in which the defendant attempted the crime. Hawthorne v. State, 751 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Whether fellatio by defendant was penetration of or with victim was irrelevant to sexual battery, and, thus, indictment could charge sexual penetration of male person under age of fourteen, even though statute prohibits sexual penetration with victim. Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Indictment for sexual battery was insufficient where it failed to notify defendant that he was being charged with sexually penetrating victim without victim's consent; indictment did not include without consent in its charge. Peterson v. State, 671 So. 2d 647 (Miss. 1996).

Amendment of indictment from sexual battery to attempted sexual battery during trial did not prejudice defendant; by virtue of attempt statute, defendant had notice that he could be convicted of attempt charge. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Charges of 2 counts of sexual battery and one count of attempted sexual battery were properly combined in indictment, where transactions upon which offenses were based occurred over period of 5 months, and offenses were committed only against one child even when other children were present and available targets, which showed common plan. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

A trial court committed reversible error in allowing an indictment to be amended to charge the defendant with a violation of subsection (2) of this section for sexual battery of a female “over” the age of 14 years, instead of subsection (1) of this section for sexual battery of a female “under the age of 14 years, since the defendant’s defense that the victim was not under 14 years of age but was 26 years old would have required the jury to return a verdict of acquittal; the amendment was “of substance” and was therefore beyond the power of the trial court to authorize. Rhymes v. State, 638 So. 2d 1270 (Miss. 1994).

Indictment tracking statutory language was sufficient to inform accused of charge against him, and no ambiguity existed where lone reference to defendant being beyond age 18 did not track statutory language. Cantrell v. State, 507 So. 2d 325 (Miss. 1987).

Where indictment charged defendant engaged in sexual battery on prosecutrix on or about or before a specified date, it was not reversible error for prosecution to prove, at trial, that defendant committed the act on the date specified in the indictment, and to prove, over defense’s objections, that similar acts had occurred on numerous occasions for several years prior thereto. Coates v. State, 495 So. 2d 464 (Miss. 1986).

Indictment which charges sexual penetration of identified victim on specified date in specified geographical location, including charge that acts were committed unlawfully, willfully and feloniously and typed label at top reading “SEXUAL BATTERY MCA 97-3-95(a)” is sufficient to charge accused with criminal offense of sexual battery. Hines v. State, 472 So. 2d 386 (Miss. 1985).

7. Evidence; generally; admissibility.

In a sexual battery prosecution, the trial court erred in allowing a forensic psychologist to testify about a child’s statement that defendant had put his mouth on the child’s penis, as the trial court made no finding as to the reliability of the hearsay statement and did not conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury as required by Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Rogers v. State, 95 So. 3d 623 (Miss. Aug. 16, 2012).

Denial of defendant’s motion for judgment of acquittal notwithstanding the verdict and, in the alternative, motion for a new trial, after he had been convicted of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a) was appropriate because the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. The case consisted largely of the victim’s word against defendant’s and that presented a factual dispute to be resolved by a jury; the supreme court was unable to determine that any rational trier of fact could not have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt after the evidence was viewed in the light most favorable to the State. Abernathy v. State, 30 So. 3d 320 (Miss. 2010).

At trial for fondling and sexual battery, it was not error under the circumstances presented to accept a witness as an expert in the field of child abuse, allow an unredacted videotape of the child victim’s interview to be admitted into evidence, or to allow the victim’s mother to testify as to statements that the victim made to her. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant was found guilty of the sexual battery of a child, the verdict was not against the weight of the evidence because the victim’s testimony was corroborated by her knowledge of the pink vibrator, the thong underwear, and the appearance of defendant’s genital area. His attempt to explain that knowledge simply created an issue of fact for the jury to resolve and the fact that the jury believed the victim gave defendant no basis for a valid complaint on appeal. Lee v. State, 944 So. 2d 56 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), affirmed by 944 So. 2d 35, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2006).

Circuit judge did not err in refusing to allow defendant’s attorneys to question his former wife about the man to whom she was now married, because the circuit court found that that testimony had no relevance where defense counsel had made a number of ambiguous statements about the relevancy of the line of questioning to aid in the establishment that other men or youth could have caused the child victim's injuries. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Where defendant was convicted of felonious sexual intercourse with a child under the age of 14, felonious sexual penetration with a child less than 18, and possession of materials depicting children under the age of 18 engaging in sexually explicit conduct, the circuit had not erred in not granting his pretrial motion to suppress evidence obtained by a search warrant based on the statements of the child victim, because she specifically stated that defendant had showed her pictures of nude people on his computer screen doing things she described as "gross." She used language to describe acts performed on her and by her in relation to defendant in such sexually explicit terms that veracity could easily be inferred. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5-year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the statements to doctors were statements made for the purposes of medical treatment, and thus an exception to the hearsay rule of exclusion. And, the statements were made as a part of neutral medical evaluations and thus were not testimonial and defendant's confrontation clause violation argument was without merit. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5-year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the victim's statements were squarely within the tender years exception to hearsay as provided by Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). There was no doubt that the overwhelming physical evidence of abuse to the child's person corroborated the statements by her alleging sexual abuse and her comments, spontaneously made to a number of professionals trained to detect abuse and its effects, showed an overwhelming sense of adult knowledge of sexual topics of which children in their earliest years should have no knowledge. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5-year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the statements to doctors were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) as statements made for the purposes of medical treatment, and thus an exception to the hearsay rule of exclusion. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Victim's testimony alone is sufficient to support a rape conviction, even though not corroborated, where it is consistent with the circumstances. Green v. State, 887 So. 2d 840 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Unsupported word of the victim of a sex crime is sufficient to support a guilty verdict where that testimony is not discredited or contradicted by other credible evidence, especially if the conduct of the victim is consistent with the conduct of one who has been victimized by a sex crime. Green v. State, 887 So. 2d 840 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was charged with two counts of sexual battery and one count of conspiracy to batter, based on the victim's allegations that defendant and his accomplice held her down, beat her, and raped her, the trial court properly instructed the jury on aiding and abetting. Defendant was convicted based on evidence that he forced the victim to have sex with him. Norris v. State, 893 So. 2d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 122 (Miss. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant based on the nine-year-old victim's statements describing the abuse and the corroborating testimony from the victim's doctor and school counselor. Davis v. State, 878 So. 2d 1020 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 67, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 964 (Miss. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 543 U.S. 1051, 125 S. Ct. 880, 160 L. Ed. 2d 773, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 474, 73 U.S.L.W. 3397 (2005).

Trial court had more than sufficient evidence before it, none of which was contradicted or even impeached during the hearing on a motion in limine regarding child victim's extrajudicial statements regarding the alleged sexual abuse, to conclude that the child's statements had sufficient indicia of reliability to overcome a hearsay objection and be admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), including the fact that the child related the events to a social worker without a great deal of prompting or prodding and told what happened in some detail in her own words, and the child was ten years old at the time. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted sexual battery of a female minor where the victim testified that defendant asked her to get into a car with him and to lie down in the back of the car, and asked her if "he was going to get him some sex," and when they arrived at a hotel room, defendant announced to other men there that the victim was there to have sex with them. Quarles v. State, 863 So. 2d 987 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Discrepancies in a child's prior statements regarding sexual abuse by defendant, a male relative, were not so damaging to the child's credibility as to have compelled the conclusion that the jury had abused its discretion in finding that she had truthfully related the events of the two encounters with defendant that led to the charges; the examining doctor testified, based on her professional experience, that it was not uncommon for a child sexual abuse victim to give different versions of events when talking to different people because, among other considerations, a child in that situation was often inclined to conceal or even deny matters if the child was made uncomfortable or fearful of the person making inquiry. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

There certainly was evidence to support conviction on two counts of sexual battery, where the child victim was eight years old when the offenses occurred, stated that defendant had stuck his finger into her vagina and placed his penis in her mouth, and her testimony included a vivid description of the events that took place between them. Peters v. State, 864 So. 2d 983 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Hearsay evidence, including statements made by the child victim were properly admitted where the trial court made extensive findings as to the factors necessary to ascertain the veracity of the child's testimony, the trial court did conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury with regard to the victim and each witness that would be testifying under the exception, and made extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law. Wright v. State, 859 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), because the first victim testified that (1) defendant engaged in sexual penetration with the first victim by inserting defendant's penis into the first victim's mouth; (2) defendant was 24 or more months older than the first victim; and (3) the first victim was under the age of 14 years. Bell v. State, 835 So. 2d 953 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 28, 2003), remanded by 202 Fed. Appx. 753, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 25826 (5th Cir. Miss. 2006).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a 10-year-old child in violation of this section, the trial court erred in allowing a bag of sexually explicit pictures found in the defendant's vehicle to be introduced into evidence, where the victim and 2 child witnesses testified that the defendant showed them pictures of nude people in a book, but they did not testify that they were shown the bag of pictures. The defendant was prejudiced by the admission of the bag of pictures to an extent that its admission constituted reversible error, since the jurors may have been offended by the explicit nudity shown in the pictures and by the graphic depictions of heterosexual and homosexual acts, and the jurors may have concluded that because the defendant collected these pictures, he did, in fact, sexually batter the victim. Wade v. State, 583 So. 2d 965 (Miss. 1991).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a child, a child therapist's brief testimony, negating the defense position that the victim had confused the defendant with other abusers, did not rise to the level of bolstering and was not reversible error. Hosford v. State, 560 So. 2d 163 (Miss. 1990).

In a sexual battery prosecution which involved allegations of homosexual acts with a minor victim, letters written by the defendant which contained references to his homosexuality were relevant as tending to show that the defendant was a homosexual conjoined with the issue of whether he in fact engaged in the act with which he was charged. Kolb v. State, 542 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1989), post-conviction relief denied, 568 So. 2d 288 (Miss. 1990).

In a prosecution for sexual battery, evidence that the defendant had gonorrhea and had infected the victim with gonorrhea was admissible. Daniel v. State, 536 So. 2d 1319 (Miss. 1988).

Trial court committed reversible error in admitting magazines other than one viewed by victim during alleged sexual battery, because other magazines were neither relevant to any issue in case nor part of res gestae of crime; they were simply found in desk drawer in shed owned by defendant, and sole function of introduction was to inflame jurors. Collins v. State, 513 So. 2d 877 (Miss. 1987).

At trial of sexual battery charge, the exclusion from evidence of letters written by prosecutrix to defendant, predicated on defense's failure to disclose them in pre-trial discovery, did not deprive defendant of his constitutional right to confront witnesses, to a fair trial, and to due process of law, even though the excluded letters, which otherwise were competent evidence, on their face reflected a relationship between defendant and his stepdaughter (prosecutrix) substantially at odds with prosecution's theory that defendant had employed threats of violence or death to force his stepdaughter to engage in sexual acts with him, contained materials which impeached testimony of prosecutrix, and contradicted other more peripheral parts of prosecution's case. Coates v. State, 495 So. 2d 464 (Miss. 1986).

In an attempted sexual battery prosecution, where, in an attempt to show hostility on the part of prosecutrix-daughter towards defendant, the defense had questioned defendant's wife with regard to a conversation with her daughter 2 weeks before the incident, the prosecution was properly allowed to cross-examine the wife about the same conversation to bring out testimony that daughter had stated that defendant had raped her 4 times. Gill v. State, 485 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. 1986).

8. —Past sex crimes.

In a prosecution for sexual battery, the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion in limine to preclude admission, for impeachment use pursuant to Rule 609, Miss. R. Ev., of his prior conviction of touching a child for lustful purposes, even though a social worker testified that a general characteristic of pedophiles is an inability to be truthful, since admission of the prior conviction would have been manifestly prejudicial and mere reference to the conviction during the trial would have prejudiced the jury irreparably. Hopkins v. State, 639 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. 1993).

It was not error to permit testimony about sex assault on victim committed weekend prior to that on which crime charged occurred because offense charge was sexual offense and evidence of past sexual crimes of accused is permitted in such cases. Woodruff v. State, 518 So. 2d 669 (Miss. 1988).

Evidence of other sexual crimes remote in time and with third parties was improperly admitted into evidence in sexual battery case, where defendant had not been convicted of any of those crimes and they were vaguely referenced to have taken place some time between 1979 and 1981, while alleged offense for which defendant was on trial occurred in 1983; in context of sexual crimes, however, it was recognized that relaxation of rule prohibiting evidence of other crimes would be granted, if prior evidence involved sexual acts of same general type and with same person, as those charged in indictment. Elmore v. State, 510 So. 2d 127 (Miss. 1987).

Where indictment charged defendant engaged in sexual battery on prosecutrix on or about or before a specified date, it was not reversible error for prosecution to prove, at trial, that defendant committed the act on the date specified in the indictment, and to prove, over defense's objections, that similar acts had occurred on numerous occasions for several years prior thereto. Coates v. State, 495 So. 2d 464 (Miss. 1986).

Evidence of prior sexual acts was admissible against defendant in a sexual battery prosecution under § 97-3-95, where each prior act of sexual penetration was performed with the same youthful victim, each incident occurred at the victim's home during a time in the day or night when her mother was at work, each of the incidents occurred within a two and a half month period, each involved actual penetration of the defendant's penis into the vaginal orifice of his daughter, each act of sexual penetration occurred without the consent of the victim, and the defendant, during three of the four prior acts of intercourse, achieved orgasm. Hicks v. State, 441 So. 2d 1359 (Miss. 1983).

9. — Sufficiency.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it denied defendant's motion for a new trial because, given the testimony from the alleged sexual battery victim and witnesses who corroborated the victim's version of events, there was no evidentiary reason to disturb the verdict. Matthews v. State, 132 So. 3d 646 (Miss. Ct. App. 2014).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for sexual battery because he was more than 24 months older than his daughter, she was under the age of 14 at the times at issue, and the testimony of the daughter, her mother, and the mother's boyfriend was sufficient to find that defendant engaged in sexual penetration of the daughter's anus and mouth. Allred v. State, 130 So. 3d 504 (Miss. 2014).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of statutory rape and sexual battery and the verdicts were not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because the victim, who was not defendant's wife, was 14 years of age, and defendant was 26 years of age at the time of the October incident; the victim testified that defendant inserted his private organ into her rectum; and the absence of physical evidence did not negate his conviction as there was testimonial evidence. Sims v. State, 127 So. 3d 307 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for statutory rape and sexual battery of a child and the overwhelming weight of the evidence was not contrary to the verdicts because the victims both testified that they visited defendant during the time span in which the offenses occurred, the victims both testified in detail regarding the sexual abuse, and the victims' mother testified regarding the victims' visitation with defendant. Hines v. State, 126 So. 3d 985 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for sexual battery by one in a position of authority over a child under the age of eighteen years old because the victim testified that defendant, the victim's grandparent, sexually abused the victim, who was under 18 years of age, when the victim was living in defendant's home and the victim's sole parent was away at the time. Moreover, defendant gave a statement to the police of having sexually abused the victim. Gill v. State, 126 So. 3d 128 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Jury's verdict finding defendant guilty of sexual battery upon his fourteen-year-old daughter was sufficiently supported by the evidence and not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because the victim testified that defendant had touched her vagina several times between June 2010 and September 2010 with his hands, mouth, penis, and a vibrator, and DNA evidence inside and outside the victim's vagina did not eliminate defendant as a potential source. Weeks v. State, 123 So. 3d 373 (Miss. 2013).

There was substantial evidence to support defendant's conviction of sexual battery as alleged in the indictment because the State's burden was met; the child demonstrated each act through hand gestures while on the witness stand, and a forensic interviewer and a detective offered corroborating testimony that the child described the incidents during interviews. Jones v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 477 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 6, 2013).

Conviction of sexual battery of a mentally deficient person, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(b), was affirmed because there was sufficient evidence that the victim suffered from a mental deficiency; among other things, the victim's special-education teacher and former mental-health therapist testified that the victim's IQ was 61 and that he was significantly cognitively disabled. Moreover, the testimony sufficiently showed that the victim's mental age was that of a young child. Santos v. State, 110 So. 3d 341 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for sexual battery of his daughter, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(2) (Rev. 2006), where the parties presented the jury with two varying theories on how defendant's DNA arrived inside of his daughter's vagina, and the jury considered the evidence and testimony presented by both parties and reached their verdict based on this information. The credibility of witness testimony was the province of the jury. Wilson v. State, 72 So. 3d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 71 So. 3d 1207, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 513 (Miss. 2011).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery even though the State failed to establish that the crime occurred within the time frame alleged in the indictment and offense-tracking instruction. Defendant was not prejudiced by the variance and the proof showed the crime could have occurred reasonably near the time frame alleged. McBride v. State, 61 So. 3d 138 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of a seven-year-old child, his nephew, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), was supported by the evidence because the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction based on fellatio-based sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a); when asked to draw an "X" where defendant put his mouth, the victim drew an "X" on the penis on an anatomically-correct drawing of a male child. Beasley v. State, 74 So. 3d 357 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for the sexual battery of his minor daughter in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d) was appropriate because, while the testimony of the victim as to her age during the incident's time frame was vague, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, there was sufficient evidence for a reasonable juror to have found that she was sexually battered well before her fourteenth birthday and within the parameters of the indictment's stated dates of "on or about or between" January 2002 and December 2005. McBride v. State, 61 So. 3d 174 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), superseded by 61 So. 3d 138, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 245 (Miss. 2011).

Fact that the jury did not find defendant guilty of sexual battery did not vitiate the evidence as to touching; it simply meant that the jury was discerning and did not find sufficient evidence to support the sexual battery charges. Dubose v. State, 22 So. 3d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery was appropriate because his conviction was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. The victim, who was 12 years old at the time, testified that she had been repeatedly raped by defendant, and her testimony was corroborated by her father's testimony and a medical examination. Tanner v. State, 20 So. 3d 764 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction of sexual battery and child fondling was supported by sufficient evidence where the victim, defendant's stepdaughter, testified that defendant fondled her breasts and genitals, inserted a vibrator into her vagina, and attempted vaginal penetration with his penis when she was between the ages of nine and ten years old. Further, the victim's grandmother testified that the victim admitted that defendant was "touching her" and that she took the victim to a doctor specializing in gynecology for a physical, and the doctor testified that her examination of the victim revealed tears in her hymen, which were consistent with and evidence of trauma. Tate v. State, 20 So. 3d 623 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for sexual battery, and a jury's verdict was not against the weight of the evidence, because the evidence, which was based on medical evidence, the testimony of the victim, the testimony of a nurse, and defendant's admissions, showed that penetration of the nine-year-old victim had occurred. Ruiz v. State, 22 So. 3d 309 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Verdict convicting defendant of sexual battery for sexual penetration of a five-year-old girl by inserting his fingers into her vagina, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), was not against the weight of the evidence because the victim testified that defendant put his fingers in her private parts; the victim's testimony was corroborated by her brother, who witnessed the incident, and by a nurse who examined her. Valmain v. State, 5 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err when it denied defendant's motion for a new trial where the jury's verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence; the victim's testimony regarding the incidents of sexual battery was never discredited, and all other witness testimony was consistent with the victim's account, and the fact that the jury did not believe defendant's theory of the case did not render the verdict untenable. Caldwell v. State, 6 So. 3d 1076 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence as sufficient to support defendant's convictions of burglary, kidnapping, and sexual battery where the father of the two-year-old victim testified that he went to pick up his girlfriend from work and left his children secured in their home, that he encountered the 17-year-old defendant while en route and told him where he was going, that he discovered upon his return that his home had been broken into and that his daughter was missing, that he found defendant with his daughter in an abandoned structure nearby, and that, upon examination, the girl's genital area was red, bleeding, and scratched and where a physician who examined the victim testified that the girl's vagina was red, swollen, and irritated but that there was no evidence of infection as the cause. Because the two-year-old victim was too short to have unlocked the door to the family home by herself and had never walked out of the home unassisted, the evidence permitted the jury to reasonably infer that defendant had broken into the family residence, removed the victim therefrom without her father's permission, and sexually assaulted her. Moton v. State, 999 So. 2d 1287 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction of sexual battery, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a), and for the denial of defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict because the victim's testimony of a non-consensual assault, although unsupported, was not discredited or contradicted by other credible evidence and because the DNA testing identified the defendant as the source of the semen found in the victim's vaginal vault. Wilkins v. State, 1 So. 3d 850 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of a 22-year-old mentally retarded woman, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(b), was supported by the evidence because, based on testimony by the victim's mother, the jury could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that sexual penetration, as defined in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a), was occurring at the moment the mother walked in on the victim and defendant. Holmes v. State, 20 So. 3d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 20 So. 3d 680, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 543 (Miss. 2009).

Jury was faced with the victim's account of the crime versus defendant's denial and weighing the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, the court could not find that allowing defendant's conviction under Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-5-23(1), 97-3-95(1)(d) to stand would sanction an unconscionable injustice. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Victim testified that defendant had placed two fingers inside her and the jury clearly found the victim's testimony to be more credible and resolved any conflicts in favor of the victim, and thus the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d). Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where the State presented credible testimony from the seven-year-old victim, a social worker, a nurse specializing in sexual assault examinations, and an investigator with the sheriff's department, the evidence was sufficient to establish the elements of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95. Tests showed that the victim's hymen had been broken, and she was infected with gonorrhea, and there were abnormalities in the victim's vagina and anus indicating penetration with a blunt object, consistent with penetration by a penis. Reed v. State, 987 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Victim's testimony that defendant sexually abused her was not discredited or contradicted by other credible evidence, and the jury believed the testimony of the victim, her mother, and her doctor; therefore, there was sufficient and credible evidence for a reasonable jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery beyond a reasonable doubt. Morgan v. State, 995 So. 2d 812 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 661 (Miss. 2008).

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, request for post-conviction relief after he was convicted of capital murder (murder during the commission of sexual battery) was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Even if counsel had procured a DNA expert who testified that the inmate's DNA was not present, that did not exonerate the inmate of the sexual battery charge because sexual penetration could be by insertion of any object into the genital or anal opening of another person's body. Havard v. State, 988 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's criminal prosecution for sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, the victim testified that when she was nine years old defendant touched her with his private parts while he was dating her mother; the testimony of six witnesses showed a consistency in the victim's allegations and expert testimony showed that the victim exhibited the physical and psychological characteristics of a sexually abused child. There was sufficient proof to establish the essential elements of sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c); the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions for a directed verdict. Smith v. State, 989 So. 2d 973 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of a minor at least 14 years of age but under 16 years of age in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c) was appropriate because, based on the closeness of the victim's birthday and the estimated date of conception, the jury could have reasonably determined that the victim was 14 at the time the baby was conceived with defendant as the father. The crime of sexual battery was committed against the victim and the DNA evidence, if believed as it was by the jury, indicated that defendant was the perpetrator. Jones v. State, 991 So. 2d 629 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 495 (Miss. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of child sexual abuse, despite the fact that there was no physical evidence of sexual penetration, because the jury could have inferred that such occurred in the form of cunnilingus. The six-year-old victim stated that defendant had taken her into his trailer, told her about sex, and licked her bottom; it was shown that the child was unable to distinguish between her genital and anal area due to her age. Pierce v. State, 2 So. 3d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 93 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 558 U.S. 846, 130 S. Ct. 113, 175 L. Ed. 2d 74, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5318, 78 U.S.L.W. 3173 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery where although he stated that the evidence was insufficient to sustain his conviction, he did not elaborate as to why he considered the evidence insufficient; the victim testified that defendant placed his finger in her vagina against her will, and the jury believed the victim over defendant. Leonard v. State, 972 So. 2d 24 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery where there was ample evidence to support the jury's verdict; the jury heard the victim's testimony in which she described the various inappropriate ways defendant touched her, and the jury also heard defendant's recorded phone conversations with the victim. Williams v. State, 970 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied where there was a factual basis for a plea to sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a), (d); defendant confessed to police that he penetrated a 13-year-old when he was 25, the victim stated that she was the victim of forcible intercourse, and the medical evidence showed that she had been vaginally penetrated. Parkman v. State, 953 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a sexual battery case, defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied because the state showed that penetration occurred through a child victim's testimony and that of a doctor; the victim stated that defendant put his finger in her "middle spot," and an examination revealed that she had an inflamed hymen. Pryer v. State, 958 So. 2d 818 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the evidence weighed in the light most favorable to the verdict supported the jury's resolution of the conflicting testimony; the evidence presented in defendant's trial for sexual battery and fondling included: (1) the victim's testimony in graphic detail as to the licking and touching that she endured from defendant; (2) defendant exercised his right to testify and testified that he did nothing wrong to the victim, his stepdaughter, but that the victim just wanted him out of the house; and (3) an investigator testified regarding what defendant stated in his written statement as well as statements defendant made that he did not want in the written statement. Ivy v. State, 949 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict because there was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of both sexual battery and fondling; the victim testified that, inter alia: (1) defendant licked her everywhere, including between her legs and her chest; (2) defendant penetrated the victim's vagina with his tongue; (3) defendant pulled off the victim's panties in order to fondle and lick her; (4) defendant pulled up her shirt to lick her chest; (5) defendant tried to insert his thumb inside the victim; (6) and the victim was 13 years old at the time, and defendant was her stepfather. Ivy v. State, 949 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2007).

Based on the doctor's testimony concerning the victim's injuries to his rectum which he stated were consistent with sexual battery and the victim's testimony that defendant assaulted him, the evidence was sufficient for the jury to draw a reasonable inference that defendant sexually penetrated the victim's rectum; thus, defendant's sexual battery conviction was affirmed. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery was upheld where the victim's testimony established that defendant forced her to have sex with him against her will. Even assuming that the victim's uncorroborated testimony was insufficient, she testified that she reported the sexual battery to her boyfriend and grandmother almost immediately, and she went to the police station on the night of the incident. Jones v. State, 936 So. 2d 951 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

There was sufficient evidence for a jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(d), where the testimony of the seven-year-old victim's sister and a forensic interviewer and social worker bolstered the victim's testimony that defendant, when he was 17 years old, inserted his finger into the victim's vagina. McClure v. State, 941 So. 2d 896 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted sexual battery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-7 and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a) and (d) because, inter alia: (1) there was evidence that defendant intended to penetrate the six-year-old victim's privates with his privates, which satisfied the definition of penetration under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a); and (2) at the time of the incident, defendant, who was 18, was more than two years older than the victim. Bracken v. State, 939 So. 2d 826 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a sexual battery case, the weight of the evidence supported defendant's convictions because a doctor testified that she found lacerations to the victim's rectum consistent with molestation, and witnesses testified that the victim told them that defendant molested him. Davis v. State, 933 So. 2d 1014 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of sexual battery because the victim, an eight-year-old girl, testified that defendant took her into another room where he pulled down his pants and made her commit an oral act on his penis. Curry v. State, 943 So. 2d 78 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Fifteen-year-old victim testified that defendant kissed her neck, fondled her breasts, and put his fingers into her privates; that conduct clearly constituted sexual battery under the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c). Also, the corroborated testimony of the victim provided a sound basis for the jury's determination of guilt; thus, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery. Smith v. State, 925 So. 2d 825 (Miss. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery, where the trial court found that defendant's statement was given voluntarily after being advised of his rights, and was not the result of threats, promises, coercion, or duress, and there was an abundance of evidence present to prove the corpus delicti; the victim's testimony, the testimony of the interviewers, as well as defendant's own confession, served as enough evidence for the jury to weigh in favor of defendant's conviction. Frei v. State, 934 So. 2d 318 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery was proper where the jury verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Photographs at trial clearly showed the presence of the victim's injuries and various witnesses testified to seeing those injuries first-hand. Houston v. State, 911 So. 2d 1018 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

There was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of capital rape and sexual assault where the State offered the testimony of a number of medical and counseling professionals indicating that the victim's statements were consistent with those of a sexual abuse victim. The victim named defendant as the perpetrator, and the State offered physical evidence in the form of medical diagnoses and test results as well as many of the objects the victim stated defendant utilized in his abuse of her. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Judge did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict where evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, as the victim testified that defendant touched her in her private area and placed his penis in her mouth, and any issue of the victim's credibility as a witness was within the province of the jury. Hensley v. State, 912 So. 2d 1083 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of two counts of sexual battery where, even though the minor victims' testimony slightly differed regarding the events of the sexual abuse, the word of the victim of a sex crime, even if unsupported, was sufficient to support a guilty verdict when that testimony had not been discredited or contradicted by credible evidence; based on the evidence presented, the jury decided which testimony to accept and which to reject and returned a reasonable verdict. Bradley v. State, 921 So. 2d 385 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient for a reasonable jury to find that defendant committed sexual battery where both the victim and the eyewitness testified that defendant played a pornographic video and that the victim subsequently performed oral sex on him at his request and the jury apparently accepted the victim's testimony over her great aunt's contradictory testimony. Durbin v. State, 924 So. 2d 562 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of three counts of sexual battery where the children's testimony was clear and consistent with the three counts charged against defendant, and the only evidence presented to contradict their testimony was defendant's testimony, for which he presented a general denial of the accusations; the testimony from the witnesses was consistent with the accounts provided by the children and the jury was the sole judge of witness credibility. Torrey v. State, 891 So. 2d 188 (Miss. 2004).

Where the victim testified that defendant forced her to perform oral sex on him and raped her, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for sexual battery and rape. The victim gave a recorded statement to the police that night; the fact that the rape kit did not conclusively identify defendant as the source of semen retrieved did not detract from the validity of her testimony. Green v. State, 887 So. 2d 840 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where the child-victim told her mother that defendant had sexually abused her and the medical evidence showed that she suffered a vaginal tear indicative of forced penetration by an adult male, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery. Perry v. State, 904 So. 2d 1122 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where the child-victims testified as to several incidents of sexual abuse spanning the course of several years and police found items in defendant's home that the victims alleged were used during their sexual encounters, including a pornographic tape, condoms, and some lubricant, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for five counts of statutory rape, one count of sexual battery, and three counts of fondling. Moses v. State, 885 So. 2d 730 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Given the corroborated testimony of defendant's daughter and the results of the sexual abuse examination, there was more than sufficient evidence in the record to support the guilty verdict of sexual battery against defendant; therefore, the findings of the trial judge, sitting as the jury, were neither manifestly wrong nor clearly erroneous. Wilson v. State, 891 So. 2d 237 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 892 So. 2d 824, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 32 (Miss. 2005).

Both girls testified as victims and eyewitnesses to defendant's crimes of statutory rape and sexual battery; any issues of credibility or motive were for the jury to decide. Thus, the verdict was not contrary to either the weight or the sufficiency of the the evidence, and defendant's convictions for statutory rape and sexual battery were affirmed. Barrett v. State, 886 So. 2d 22 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 887 So. 2d 183, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1371 (Miss. 2004).

Where victim's mother stated that defendant, the mother's boyfriend, had sex with her 10-year-old daughter, the jury's guilty verdict of sexual battery and statutory rape was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence, as the jury had heard the evidence and the testimony of the witnesses, including a social worker, a doctor who examined the victim and determined that she had been sexually abused, and a molecular biology and DNA expert who opined that the genetic profile of the sperm extracted from the victim's panties was consistent with the suspect being the major contributor. Sanderson v. State, 872 So. 2d 735 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of capital murder as the evidence showed the victim died of blunt force trauma and was sexually assaulted and defendant was the only adult in the home with the child when she died. Gilmore v. State, 872 So. 2d 744 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where a victim testified that defendant had committed an abduction, restrained the victim, and driven the victim to another location before performing various sexual acts while holding a weapon to the victim's head, there was sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction for sexual battery. McCoy v. State, 878 So. 2d 167 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 67, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 910 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery, statutory rape, and touching a child for lustful purposes where the totally uncorroborated testimony of the victims was sufficient to support a guilty verdict where that testimony was not discredited or contradicted by other evidence; it was the jury's duty to resolve conflicts in testimony. Carle v. State, 864 So. 2d 993 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Child victim's testimony to sexual abuse was corroborated by the child's mother, the counselor from the department of human services, a law enforcement officer, and a doctor, the doctor testifying to better than a reasonable degree of medical certainty that the victim had been digitally penetrated, thus, there was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for sexual battery. Wright v. State, 859 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery where the victim testified clearly that defendant acted without her consent and that she struggled with him, scratching and hitting him in order to try to get him to stop; pictures of defendant with scratches on his face were introduced into evidence supporting the victim's testimony, and the jury was the judge of the weight and credibility of testimony and was free to accept or reject all or some of the testimony given by each witness. Piercy v. State, 850 So. 2d 219 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), because the first victim testified that (1) defendant engaged in sexual penetration with the first victim by inserting defendant's penis into the first victim's mouth; (2) defendant was 24 or more months older than the first victim; and (3) the first victim was under the age of 14 years. Bell v. State, 835 So. 2d 953 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 28, 2003), remanded by 202 Fed. Appx. 753, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 25826 (5th Cir. Miss. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of sexual battery where the unsupported word of the victim was sufficient to support a guilty verdict and the testimony was not discredited or contradicted by other credible evidence, especially if the conduct of the victim was consistent with the conduct of one who had been victimized by a sex crime; the victim's testimony was not discredited or contradicted. Byars v. State, 835 So. 2d 965 (Miss. Ct. App. January 28, 2003).

Evidence was sufficient where the 10-year-old victim gave a statement to the police, alleging that defendant had committed sexual acts on her; the child was not presumed to be dishonest; and the McClain standard was not met and reversal was thus not required. Parker v. State, 825 So. 2d 59 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Sufficient evidence was presented to the jury by the State with regard to the element of lack of consent, and the jury was entitled to find the victim more credible than the defendant. Winters v. State, 814 So. 2d 184 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence was sufficient to establish attempted sexual battery where (1) the nine-year-old victim was in a check-out line at a store with his mother when the mother sent victim back to the appropriate aisle to get a box of cereal, (2) once the victim got to that aisle, the defendant approached him and asked, using the vernacular, if he could engage in fellatio on the victim, (3) simultaneously with the verbal request, the defendant pointed to his own genitals, (4) the victim refused, and the encounter ended, and (5) the defendant never touched the victim or made any effort to restrain him. Ishee v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 412 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 29, 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support the conviction of the defendant for sexual battery of several young children, notwithstanding the absence of physical evidence, the fact that some of the children could not remember exact dates, and the assertion that the allegations of the children were suspect in light of their continued visits to his home after the alleged incidents of abuse. Williams v. State, 757 So. 2d 953 (Miss. 1999).

Evidence was sufficient to establish penetration and, therefore, to support a conviction for sexual battery, where the victim testified that the defendant partially penetrated her, and the arresting officer testified that the defendant admitted to him that he was trying to have sexual relations with the victim but that he did not rape her. Hopson v. State, 749 So. 2d 227 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction under subsection (1)(c) of this section, notwithstanding that the case was a "he said, she said" case; the facts and inferences did not so point in favor of the defendant that a reasonable person could not have found him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Vaughan v. State, 759 So. 2d 1092 (Miss. 1999).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction where he admitted to sexual intercourse with the victim and claimed that the victim consented, but the victim asserted that she did not consent. Waltman v. State, 734 So. 2d 324 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Conviction for sexual battery and attempted sexual battery was supported by victim's testimony that described anal and digital penetration, attempted anal penetration, and attempted cunnilingus, victim's testimony that defendant had threatened to harm other members of her family if she told anyone about the abuse, corroboration by other witnesses, and evidence that immediately after alleged abuse, victim had been treated for gonorrhea and chlamydia. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

In an attempted sexual battery prosecution, testimony of victim, the defendant's daughter, concerning the attempt, which was partially corroborated by her brother, together with testimony of neighbor admissible under exception to hearsay rule, and testimony of defendant's wife on cross-examination, furnished ample competent evidence to support jury's guilty verdict. Gill v. State, 485 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution for attempted sexual battery in violation of this section, evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction under § 97-1-7, where the uncontradicted facts indicated that there was no penetration, as defined by § 97-3-97, the prosecution conceded that there was no attempt to penetrate, the defendant had every opportunity to penetrate if he had wished to do so, and his failure was not the product of his victim's admittedly ineffective resistance or the intervention of extraneous causes. West v. State, 437 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 1983).

10. —Other; miscellaneous.

Prosecutor's lone isolated comment that the alleged sexual battery victim had to tell an investigator about the victim's first sexual experience did not rise to the level of prosecutorial misconduct so extreme as to violate defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial. Matthews v. State, 132 So. 3d 646 (Miss. Ct. App. 2014).

In a sexual-battery case, the trial court did not err in allowing an employee of the Mississippi Department of Human Services to testify about the victim's statements to her because the victim was of tender years when she made the statement, as she was 12 years old; the victim's statements to the employee had substantial indicia of reliability; and the victim testified at trial. Pickett v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 761 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 12, 2013).

In a sexual-battery case, the trial court incorrectly identified the evidence of the testimony of the victim's mother about what her son told her as hearsay because it was not admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but, rather, it was admitted only to show why the victim's mother went to the back room where she stated that she found the victim kneeling on the floor facing defendant, who had his pants and underwear pulled down around his knees. Pickett v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 761 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 12, 2013).

In a sexual-battery case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by accepting the licensed clinical social worker as an expert witness and allowing her to testify that she diagnosed the victim with post-traumatic stress disorder based on information gathered from the victim though an interview because the Daubert factor of being able to test an expert witness's opinion for reliability did not apply. Pickett v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 761 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 12, 2013).

In a case of sexual battery of a victim under the age of 14, the trial court was not required to conduct a preliminary interrogation of the four-year-old child to determine competency, and defendant did not show that the trial court erred in allowing her to testify. Graham v. State, 120 So. 3d 1038 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's written confession to penetration of his six-year-old niece in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d) was properly admitted because his case was in the investigatory stage, not the accusatory stage; moreover, the trial court found that his confession was not coerced by the promise of a six-month to one-year sentence. Petty v. State, 118 So. 3d 659 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Denial of defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal notwithstanding the verdict and, in the alternative, motion for a new trial, after he had been convicted of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a) was appropriate because the defense failed to make a sufficient proffer after the trial court excluded a doctor's testimony. Further, even finding that the doctor's testimony would have been relevant, the record was insufficient for the supreme court to determine whether it could have survived under the Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test for admissibility. Abernathy v. State, 30 So. 3d 320 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of child under the age of 14 in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1) was appropriate because the admission of the testimony of a forensic interviewer and a doctor who was an expert in forensic interviewing and child abuse was not erroneous. The record did not show that those witnesses failed to reliably apply the principles of their expertise to the case. Carter v. State, 996 So. 2d 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 43 (Miss. 2009).

Admission of testimony by a child's mother was improper under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because there was no hearing conducted; moreover, it was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) because the child made the statement to the mother long after alleged sexual abuse. However, the error was harmless where the evidence came in through Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) due to an examination by a doctor. Pierce v. State, 2 So. 3d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 93 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 558 U.S. 846, 130 S. Ct. 113, 175 L. Ed. 2d 74, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5318, 78 U.S.L.W. 3173 (2009).

Evidence that a child victim had allegedly caused injuries to his own rectum by sticking objects there was properly excluded in a sexual battery case because it was irrelevant under Miss. R. Evid. 401 and highly prejudicial under Miss. R. Evid. 403, and it was also a collateral issue that was too remote in time to rebut the charges based on the fact that it was a year before the charges in an indictment; case law under Miss. R. Evid. 412 was helpful in making this determination, despite the fact that the victim's actions did not constitute clear sexual activity. Mason v. State, 971 So. 2d 618 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 701 (Miss. 2007).

In a sexual battery of a child case, the State and the trial court complied with Miss. R. Evid. 702, in eliciting a psychotherapist's qualifications in open court; defendant was put on notice of her qualifications, credentials, and the nature of her testimony. Defendant had ample opportunity to challenge those qualifications but chose not to do so; thus, the trial court did not err in finding that the child was unavailable to testify under Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(6) because there was substantial likelihood the victim's emotional or psychological health would be substantially impaired if he were required to testify in the physical presence of defendant. Hobgood v. State, 926 So. 2d 847 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1118, 127 S. Ct. 928, 166 L. Ed. 2d 714, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 143, 75 U.S.L.W. 3350 (2007).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 was proper because, without more, the victim's use of the "I have a friend" approach in a letter, did not cast doubt on her credibility, and thus the appellate court was unable to find reversible error in permitting testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Larson v. State, 957 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 958 So. 2d 1232, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 318 (Miss. 2007).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a three-year-old female child, the trial judge had discretion to either accept or reject offered evidence, and the trial judge was within his rights to accept the testimony of the child as competent, but to later reject testimony from the child given in response to defense counsel's cross-examination where such testimony was found by the trial judge to be incompetent. Renfrow v. State, 863 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 882 So. 2d 800, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 919 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's post-conviction claim that counsel was ineffective in failing to challenge an unconstitutional indictment charging two counts of sexual battery on a child under the age of 14 years in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1) was without merit as defendant's claim was actually that the indictment did not allege the proper subsections of the statute, and that the statute as it read at the time of the alleged offenses did not contain the subsection divisions referred to by defendant. Agee v. State, 829 So. 2d 726 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

For statement made by child of tender years describing act of sexual contact performed with or on child by another to be admissible, reliability of statement must be judged independently of any corroborating evidence. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

A defendant's conviction of sexual battery would be reversed and remanded for a new trial where the prosecution failed to present evidence that the victim was under 14 years of age; the inference of the victim's age from the mere fact that she had teenage babysitters or from the jury's actual sight of the victim while she testified was insufficient to sustain a verdict that she was below the age of 14 beyond a reasonable doubt. Washington v. State, 645 So. 2d 915 (Miss. 1994).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of the defendant's 5-year-old daughter, the use of the defendant's guilty plea to simple assault on his daughter 2 years earlier was a proper use of a prior inconsistent statement to impeach the defendant's credibility as a witness under Rules 613 and 801(d)(2), Miss. R. Ev., where the defendant denied during direct examination that he had ever "abused" his daughter, thereby "opening the door" for impeachment; although the prior conviction for simple assault was admissible for the purpose of impeachment, the defendant should not have been cross-examined about the details of the abuse leading to the conviction. Quimby v. State, 604 So. 2d 741 (Miss. 1992).

Under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, the fact that questions are asked, while relevant to spontaneity, does not ipso facto demonstrate a lack of spontaneity in every case. Thus, a sexual battery victim's statements to a police officer and a crossing guard were admissible under the excited utterance exception where the only question asked of the victim was "what happened?" and the statements were made shortly after the incident when the victim was still extremely upset. Sanders v. State, 586 So. 2d 792 (Miss. 1991).

Since it is doubtful that a child sexual abuse syndrome or profile is generally accepted by the scientific community, courts should be reluctant to allow expert testimony that a child displays the so-called typical characteristics of other victims. However, the admission of such improper testimony in a prosecution for sexual battery of a child was harmless where the entire defense strategy was predicated on the assumption that the child had been sexually abused by persons other than the defendant, and was therefore confused regarding the identity of the abuser and the nature of displays of affection; since the defense admitted that the child was a sexual abuse victim, there was no reversible error in allowing the expert witness to give her opinion that the child exhibited the characteristics of a sex abuse victim. Hosford v. State, 560 So. 2d 163 (Miss. 1990).

Evidence of prior sexual assault upon victim, not committed by defendant, was not relevant, although defendant argued it established knowledge of this kind of abnormal behavior on victim's part thus enabling him to falsely accuse defendant and that it went to issue of consent. Woodruff v. State, 518 So. 2d 669 (Miss. 1988).

Instances of previous molestation of child victim by person other than accused may be relevant, but relevancy must be determined by trial judge in his discretion. Woodruff v. State, 518 So. 2d 669 (Miss. 1988).

Defense counsel may not elicit from 9 year old victim of sexual battery answer to question of whether victim has ever seen act of sexual intercourse. Hines v. State, 472 So. 2d 386 (Miss. 1985).

Prosecutor in sexual battery prosecution may use leading questions in examination of 9 year old girl who is alleged victim of battery; however, where on cross-examination girl's responses become equivocal, court may not initiate series of questions without request from state or defendant which have effect of reconstituting witness and thereby lending court's approval to her testimony before jury. Thompson v. State, 468 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1985).

11. Practice and procedure; jury instructions.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it denied defendant's request for a new trial on the basis that the alleged sexual battery victim concealed and destroyed important evidence because defendant neither requested the jury be instructed on a spoliation inference, nor did defendant show that defendant was entitled to a spoliation instruction, as defendant conceded that the State of Mississippi did nothing wrong regarding the victim's clothes. Matthews v. State, 132 So. 3d 646 (Miss. Ct. App. 2014).

Jury instruction submitted to the jury fairly stated the law of the case, and did not create an injustice, because the instruction followed the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 and clearly asked the jury to determine whether defendant was in a position of trust or authority at the time when defendant was alleged to have sexually abused the victim. Gill v. State, 126 So. 3d 128 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Giving of a jury instruction did not constitute error by allowing the jury to convict defendant on a broader definition of sexual battery than the crime alleged in the indictment because the jury was fairly and adequately instructed, and defendant was clearly convicted of the crime for which he was charged in the indictment; the disputed language in the instruction did not substantially alter the elements of proof necessary to find defendant guilty. Jones v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 477 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 6, 2013).

Trial court's failure to include in a jury instruction the element of sexual battery that defendant was twenty-four or more months older than the child was not prejudicial and did not amount to plain error because that element was listed in the indictment; therefore, defendant was given sufficient notice and had a reasonable opportunity to prepare and present a defense to that element, but he did not do so. Jones v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 477 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 6, 2013).

Trial court did not err in failing to include in a jury instruction the element of sexual battery that defendant was twenty-four or more months older than the child because the absence of the element had no effect on the State's burden of proof, and the jury was properly instructed as to the State's burden; any fair-minded juror could have easily deduced that defendant, being twenty-eight years of age, was twenty-four or more months older than the child, who was eight years old. Jones v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 477 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 6, 2013).

In defendant's sexual battery prosecution under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(2) (Rev. 2006), the jury was properly instructed that if it found that defendant possessed the status of the victim's parent, then it must find that he held a position of trust or authority over the victim. Wilson v. State, 72 So. 3d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 71 So. 3d 1207, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 513 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant argued that a sexual battery instruction proved an element of the crime, namely that the child was under the age of 14, but defendant was procedurally barred from raising this issue for the first time on appeal, plus the victim's age at the time of the crime was sufficiently established. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Instructing the jury that in order to sustain a conviction for the crime of sexual battery some penetration had to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, however, it did not need to be full penetration, and even the slightest penetration was sufficient to prove the crime of sexual battery, was proper. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where the instruction given to the jury regarding sexual battery did not require the jury to find that the penetration was without consent as required by Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, defendant was entitled to a new trial. Goodin v. State, 977 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2008).

Where a doctor who examined the victim testified that the victim's rectum was swollen and there was a tear on the opening into the rectum, and he stated that those injuries were consistent with sexual battery, the evidence clearly indicated that the victim was sexually penetrated pursuant to the sexual battery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d); with regard to the statement by the victim's grandmother that the victim had told lies before, the evidence did not rise to the level of conflicting evidence warranting a lustful touching jury instruction, and thus the trial court did not err in denying the jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of lustful touching. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Circuit had not erred in not giving defendant's proposed instructions on circumstantial evidence because the circuit court found the child victim's medical report constituted actual or direct evidence. Additionally, the child was clearly an eyewitness to the abuse committed upon her person. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Trial judge mistakenly determined the crime of molestation under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 to be a lesser-included offense of sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95; molestation was recognized as a separate offense from sexual battery as defendants were frequently charged with both crimes simultaneously, such that to allow defendant to be convicted of a crime for which he was never charged would have created an injustice, as the legislature felt it necessary to construct two separate and distinct statutes regarding sexual battery and molestation. Friley v. State, 856 So. 2d 654 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), reversed by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 998 (Miss. Aug. 5, 2004).

In a prosecution for sexual battery on his wife, the court was not obligated to give a sua sponte lesser offense instruction on simple assault. Trigg v. State, 759 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

This section creates three separate classes of victims. Thus, in a prosecution for sexual battery of a child under the age of 14, the defendant was not entitled to an instruction containing the element "without her consent." Ryan v. State, 525 So. 2d 799 (Miss. 1988).

Supposed defect in instruction which limits crime charged from general "sexual penetration" of indictment to more specific "anal sexual penetration," yet still allows jury to return verdict of "guilty as charged" is technical point that should be tidied up but does not constitute ground for reversal of conviction where defense counsel makes no utterance remotely resembling objection when instruction is tendered. Hines v. State, 472 So. 2d 386 (Miss. 1985).

12. Sentence.

Defendant's sentence of thirty-five years in prison, with thirty years to serve and five years suspended, followed by five years' supervised probation, without the possibility of parole, was permissible under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-3(1)(b), although Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101(3) did not expressly authorize day-for-day sentences and parole restrictions. Petty v. State, 118 So. 3d 659 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's sentence was affirmed because the trial judge was well within his authority in Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-21 to impose concurrent or consecutive sentences, and pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-2(3), the court could impose separate sentences for each of his sexual battery of a minor convictions under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d). Eason v. Epps, 32 So. 3d 538 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-1-1 and 97-3-95(1)(d), sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1), defendant father was sentenced to five years and a $ 5,000 fine on the conspiracy count; 30 years and a $ 10,000 fine on the sexual battery count; and one year and a $ 1,000 fine on the contributing to the delinquency of a minor charge and the trial court ordered that the prison time be served consecutively; however, nothing in the record or presented by defendant father warranted reversal or reduction of his sentence because his sentence was within the statutory limits and it was a just punishment for the despicable crimes for which he was found guilty by a fair and impartial jury. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court acted within its discretion by imposing 2 consecutive 20-year sentences for 2 sexual battery convictions and concurrent 20-year sentence for attempted sexual battery conviction. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Sentence of 30 years in prison without probation or parole, maximum term of imprisonment prescribed for offense of sexual battery, did not violate either United States Constitution or Mississippi Constitution; under standards set forth in Solem v. Helm (1983) 463 U.S. 277, 77 L. Ed. 2d 637, 103 S. Ct. 3001 (superseded by statute as stated in Re Petition of Lauer (CA8) 788 F2d 135) sentence was not grossly disproportionate to crime of sexual battery where harshness of penalty was justified by gravity of offense, non-habitual offenders convicted under this section could be sentenced to up to 30 years in prison, and sentence was not so dissimilar to sentences for same crime in other states as to make it a disproportionate penalty. Davis v. State, 510 So. 2d 794 (Miss. 1987).

13. Other, miscellaneous.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant a mistrial due to remarks the prosecutor made about other children being present in a house when an assault on the child victim occurred because defendant himself provided overwhelming evidence of his guilt in a statement in which he admitted that not only did the victim perform oral sex on defendant, but that defendant had performed anal sex on the victim. Flowers v. State, 119 So. 3d 1108 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Offender was required to continue registering as a sex offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 45-33-47(2)(b)(ix) due to his guilty plea to a Maryland sex offense because: (1) the offender admitted in his plea that he had placed his hands on the victim's vagina without her consent; and (2) his conduct and plea satisfied the elements of the Mississippi crime of attempted sexual battery, which was a registrable offense under Miss. Code Ann. § 45-33-25(1). Stallworth v. Miss. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 986 So. 2d 259 (Miss. 2008).

Where there was nothing in the record before the appellate court that would have permitted any meaningful analysis of what uncalled witnesses might have testified to, nor whether there might have been compelling reasons not to call them even if they were prepared to offer the testimony that defendant contended they would have in his brief, defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim had to be accomplished through the vehicle of a post-conviction relief motion. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was indicted for the crime of sexual battery, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, but convicted of touching a child for lustful purposes under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1), there was a common nucleus of operative facts and the record contained an evidentiary basis for the trial court to grant an instruction on the lesser offense of unlawful touching. Further, because defendant offered an instruction that would have allowed the jury to find defendant guilty of the lesser offense (as opposed to a "lesser-included offense"), the lack of an indictment on the lesser offense was waived, and the trial court did not commit plain error when it granted the lesser offense instruction. Dupuis v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 1268 (Miss. Ct. App. June 24, 2003).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-1-1 and 97-3-95(1)(d), sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1), none of the issues raised by defendant father rose to the level of reversible error either standing alone or when considered together as the evidence supported the finding that defendant father was the ringleader of the abominable enterprise and he failed to demonstrate any procedural or substantive errors that warranted reversal; thus, defendant father's convictions and sentences were affirmed. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

An indictment charging a killing occurring "while engaged in the commission of" one of the enumerated felonies in § 97-3-19 includes the actions of the defendant leading up to the felony, the attempted felony, and flight from the scene of the felony. Thus, in a capital murder prosecution, involving the underlying felony of sexual battery, the fact that the actual moment of the victim's death preceded consummation of the underlying felony did not vitiate the capital charge. Baker v. Baker, 553 So. 2d 8 (Miss. 1989).

Proof was sufficient to establish burglary under former § 97-17-21 where evidence established that defendant was in vicinity of crime at time and on occasion of its commission; that shortly thereafter windowpane in door was found broken, which constituted evidence of forcible breaking and entering of occupied dwelling; and, that victim was found with bloody mouth, battered face, and unclothed lower half, which constituted evidence of intent to commit sexual battery upon mentally defective person under this section; when crime charged is burglary, prosecution need not prove sexual penetration of victim, but must merely prove that defendant broke and entered with intent to commit that crime. Williams v. State, 512 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1987).

14. Lesser included offenses.

Trial court did not err by giving a lesser-included-offense jury instruction regarding fondling under the count charging defendant with sexual battery because ample evidence supported the lesser-included offense of fondling, and the intent element of fondling could be inferred from defendant's actions. Jenkins v. State, 131 So. 3d 544 (Miss. 2013), modified and rehearing denied by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 133 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2014).

In a sexual battery, the circuit court did not err in denying defendant's proposed lesser-included-offense instruction for simple assault because sexual battery (the superior offense) could have been committed without a simple assault (the putative lesser-included offense) being committed. Thus, the elements of the separate offenses were distinctly different. Wallace v. State, 10 So. 3d 913 (Miss. 2009).

In a sexual battery case, a trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on simple assault which was not a lesser-included offense; the element "bodily injury" was missing from the sexual battery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95. Seigfried v. State, 869 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 870 So. 2d 666, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 352 (Miss. 2004).

15. Double jeopardy.

Defendant was properly convicted of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(d)(1) and unlawful touching of a child under the age of sixteen in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because his rights under the Double Jeopardy Clause were not violated when the record clearly evinced two separate acts of touching, and the State presented separate and independent proof of each charge; defendant sexually assaulted the victim in her living room when he committed statutory rape and sexually assaulted her again when he committed sexual battery by inserting his finger into her anus, and evidence was presented by numerous witnesses that the victim consistently described a second act of touching at a different time and in a different location of the house. Woods v. State, 30 So. 3d 362 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Crime of sexual abuse of a vulnerable person under Miss. Code Ann. § 43-47-19 does not encompass the crime of sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, and a conviction of both offenses does not implicate double jeopardy concerns because the crimes require additional and different elements of proof; specifically, the former offense does not require proof of penetration, while the latter offense does require this proof. Additionally, abuse of a vulnerable person requires proof that defendant willfully inflicted physical pain or injury upon a vulnerable person, while sexual battery has no such requirement; there are additional differences in that sexual battery does not require that the victim's abilities to provide for his or her protection from sexual contact be impaired by the infirmities of aging or that the victim be a patient or resident of a care facility, while the charge of abuse of a vulnerable person does require this additional element. Simoneaux v. State, 29 So. 3d 26 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 115 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 151, 178 L. Ed. 2d 38, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 6093, 79 U.S.L.W. 3196 (U.S. 2010).

Where defendant was tried in a second case for statutory rape, sexual battery, and fondling, double jeopardy was not violated; while the victims were the same, the factual bases supporting the charges in the current indictment were totally different from the factual bases undergirding the charges in the first case. Moses v. State, 885 So. 2d 730 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

16. New trial.

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied because jury's verdict did not amount to an unconscionable injustice and because the evidence did not preponderate heavily against the jury's verdict finding defendant guilty of sexual battery involving an eight-year-old boy where the evidence included testimony of the victim, the victim's mother, the nurse who examined the victim on the night of the attack, a serologist who determined that the dried secretions found on the buttocks of the victim were seminal fluid, and members of the police department who participated in the investigation. The victim maintained a largely consistent story from his first reports to his testimony on the stand, and all of the State's witnesses presented testimony that implicated defendant; even though there was some conflicting evidence presented by the defense and the defense presented an alibi, the evidence presented by the State was of such a level that the guilty verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Bolden v. State, 23 So. 3d 491 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 22 So. 3d 1193, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 614 (Miss. 2009).

In a case involving sexual battery of a child under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95, a trial court did not err by denying defendant's request for a new trial or a directed verdict because, although there was no physical evidence against defendant, the victim's testimony was corroborated by a doctor, who found signs of sexual abuse during an examination. Moreover, the verdict did not sanction an unconscionable result. Steadham v. State, 995 So. 2d 835 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a child sexual abuse case where a six-year-old victim stated that defendant had taken her into his trailer, told her about sex, and licked her bottom, no new trial was required because the verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence; the child's statement was admissible into evidence, a neighbor observed the child go into defendant's trailer, and defendant was shown to live near the child. Pierce v. State, 2 So. 3d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 93 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 558 U.S. 846, 130 S. Ct. 113, 175 L. Ed. 2d 74, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5318, 78 U.S.L.W. 3173 (2009).

17. Speedy trial.

Defendant's conviction for the sexual battery of his minor daughter in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d) was appropriate because he failed to raise his statutory right to a speedy trial specifically under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-17-1. Additionally, when he raised his constitutional right to a speedy trial, it was well past the 270-day requirement of the statute. McBride v. State, 61 So. 3d 174 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), superseded by 61 So. 3d 138, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 245 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for the sexual battery of his minor daughter in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d) was appropriate because he was not denied his constitutional right to a speedy trial since, while there was a delay in the trial, there was no evidence the State deliberately created the delay, nor did defendant object in any way to the delay until the case was set for trial a month later. Further, when defendant did object, he requested the charges be dropped and not that the case be heard sooner; there was also no prejudice to the defense due to the delay. McBride v. State, 61 So. 3d 174 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), superseded by 61 So. 3d 138, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 245 (Miss. 2011).

(a) "Sexual penetration" includes cunnilingus, fellatio, buggery or pederasty, any penetration of the genital or anal openings of another person's body by any part of a person's body, and insertion of any object into the genital or anal openings of another person's body.

(b) A "mentally defective person" is one who suffers from a mental disease, defect or condition which renders that person temporarily or permanently incapable of knowing the nature and quality of his or her conduct.

(c) A "mentally incapacitated person" is one rendered incapable of knowing or controlling his or her conduct, or incapable of resisting an act due to the influence of any drug, narcotic, anesthetic, or other substance administered to that person without his or her consent.

(d) A "physically helpless person" is one who is unconscious or one who for any other reason is physically incapable of communicating an unwillingness to engage in an act.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Sexual penetration.
3. Indictment.
4. Jury Instructions.
5. Mentally defective person.

1. In general.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions where the jury obviously found the victims' testimony and the other evidence supporting the pattern of sexual abuse more credible than defendant's defense, there was no injustice in allowing the jury's verdicts to stand. Faulkner v. State, 109 So. 3d 142 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's conviction and sentence for the sexual battery of a minor child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-3-95(1)(d) and 97-3-97(a) was proper where his motion to suppress was rightfully denied since intoxication did not automatically render his confession involuntary. He failed to show symptoms of being under the influence and the record indicated that he was given his Miranda warnings and asked questions. Morris v. State, 913 So. 2d 432 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted sexual battery of a female minor where the victim testified that defendant asked her to get into a car with him and to lie down in the back of the car, and asked her if "he was going to get him some sex," and when they arrived at a hotel room, defendant announced to other men there that the victim was there to have sex with them. Quarles v. State, 863 So. 2d 987 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Whether fellatio by defendant was penetration of or with victim was irrelevant to sexual battery, and, thus, indictment could charge sexual penetration of male person under age of fourteen, even though statute prohibits sexual penetration with victim. Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Contact between person's mouth, lips, or tongue and genitals of person's body, whether by kissing, licking, or sucking, is "sexual penetration," regardless of gender of victim or perpetrator. Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Conviction for sexual battery and attempted sexual battery was supported by victim's testimony that described anal and digital penetration, attempted anal penetration, and attempted cunnilingus, victim's testimony that defendant had threatened to harm other members of her family if she told anyone about the abuse, corroboration by other witnesses, and evidence that immediately after alleged abuse, victim had been treated for gonorrhea and chlamydia. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Indictment tracking statutory language was sufficient to inform accused of charge against him, and no ambiguity existed where lone reference to defendant being beyond age 18 did not track statutory language. Cantrell v. State, 507 So. 2d 325 (Miss. 1987).

Although, on its face, the definition of sexual penetration announced in this section encompasses any penetration, the parameters of the definition of sexual penetration are logically confined to activities which are the product of sexual behavior or libidinal gratification, not merely the product of clinical examination or domestic, parental functions. Roberson v. State, 501 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1987).

In a prosecution for attempted sexual battery in violation of § 97-3-95, evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction under § 97-1-7, where the uncontradicted facts indicated that there was no penetration, as defined by this section, the prosecution conceded that there was no attempt to penetrate, the defendant had every opportunity to penetrate if he had wished to do so, and his failure was not the product of his victim's admittedly ineffective resistance or the intervention of extraneous causes. West v. State, 437 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 1983).

2. Sexual penetration.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of statutory rape and sexual battery and the verdicts were not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because the victim, who was not defendant's wife, was 14 years of age, and defendant was 26 years of age at the time of the October incident; the victim testified that defendant inserted his private organ into her rectum; and the absence of physical evidence did not negate his conviction as there was testimonial evidence. Sims v. State, 127 So. 3d 307 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of a seven-year-old child, his nephew, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), was supported by the evidence because the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction based on fellatio-based sexual battery, which was sexual penetration under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a); when asked to draw an "X" where defendant put his mouth, the victim drew an "X" on the penis on an anatomically-correct drawing of a male child. Beasley v. State, 74 So. 3d 357 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Seminal fluid found on a victim's body does not constitute penetration under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97. Singleton v. State, 16 So. 3d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

For purposes of a new trial, a guilty verdict in a sexual battery case was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because it was up to a jury to assess the reliability of a victim's sister, who testified on the issue of penetration; moreover, even though defendant's seminal fluid on the victim's body did not prove penetration, the testimony of the sister and of police detectives regarding defendant's admission of other instances of oral sex established that element of the crime. Singleton v. State, 16 So. 3d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a sexual battery case under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(2) where penetration was an issue, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied because it was up to a jury to determine the credibility of a victim's sister, who testified that she saw defendant sticking his tongue in between the victim's vagina; also, defendant admitted to other instances of oral sex performed by the victim. Singleton v. State, 16 So. 3d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of a 22-year-old mentally retarded woman, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(b), was supported by the evidence because, based on testimony by the victim's mother, the jury could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that sexual penetration, as defined in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a), was occurring at the moment the mother walked in on the victim and defendant. Holmes v. State, 20 So. 3d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 20 So. 3d 680, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 543 (Miss. 2009).

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, request for postconviction relief after he was convicted of capital murder (murder during the commission of sexual battery) was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Even if counsel had procured a DNA expert who testified that the inmate's DNA was not present, that did not exonerate the inmate of the sexual battery charge because sexual penetration could be by insertion of any object into the genital or anal opening of another person's body. Havard v. State, 988 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of child sexual abuse, despite the fact that there was no physical evidence of sexual penetration, because the jury could have inferred that such occurred in the form of cunnilingus. The six-year-old victim stated that defendant had taken her into his trailer, told her about sex, and licked her bottom; it was shown that the child was unable to distinguish between her genital and anal area due to her age. Pierce v. State, 2 So. 3d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 93 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 558 U.S. 846, 130 S. Ct. 113, 175 L. Ed. 2d 74, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5318, 78 U.S.L.W. 3173 (2009).

Based on the doctor's testimony concerning the victim's injuries to his rectum which he stated were consistent with sexual battery and the victim's testimony that defendant assaulted him, the evidence was sufficient for the jury to draw a reasonable inference that defendant sexually penetrated the victim's rectum; thus, defendant's sexual battery conviction was affirmed. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where a doctor who examined the victim testified that the victim's rectum was swollen and there was a tear on the opening into the rectum, and he stated that those injuries were consistent with sexual battery, the evidence clearly indicated that the victim was sexually penetrated pursuant to the sexual battery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d); with regard to the statement by the victim's grandmother that the victim had told lies before, the evidence did not rise to the level of conflicting evidence warranting a lustful touching jury instruction, and thus the trial court did not err in denying the jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of lustful touching. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

There was sufficient evidence for a jury to find defendant guilty of sexual battery, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(d), where the testimony of the seven-year-old victim's sister and a forensic interviewer and social worker bolstered the victim's testimony that defendant, when he was 17 years old, inserted his finger into the victim's vagina. McClure v. State, 941 So. 2d 896 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted sexual battery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-7 and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a) and (d) because, inter alia: (1) there was evidence that defendant intended to penetrate the six-year-old victim's privates with his privates, which satisfied the definition of penetration under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a); and (2) at the time of the incident, defendant, who was 18, was more than two years older than the victim. Bracken v. State, 939 So. 2d 826 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court properly refused to merge two counts of an indictment charging defendant with sexual battery because the two counts alleged two separate acts of penetration; the first count charged that defendant inserted his tongue into the victim's vagina, while the second count charged that defendant inserted his penis into the victim's vagina. Hill v. State, 929 So. 2d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was legally sufficient to show defendant committed a sexual battery upon defendant's daughter as the only contested element of sexual battery was whether there was digital penetration of the vagina and the daughter testified that defendant had put his finger in her vagina and only stopped because defendant's wife had pulled up. Pittman v. State, 836 So. 2d 779 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), writ of certiorari denied by 835 So. 2d 952, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 737 (Miss. 2003), remanded by 20 So. 3d 51, 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 664 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Cunnilingus is considered to be penetration for the purpose of determining whether or not a sexual battery occurred. Brady v. State, 722 So. 2d 151 (Ct. App. 1998).

3. Indictment.

Defendant was properly convicted of sexual battery by digital penetration where sufficient proof showed that defendant was provided notice that he was being charged with sexual battery, and the variance between the language of the indictment and proof at trial was not a fatal error under Miss. Const. art. 3, § 26. Burrows v. State, 961 So. 2d 701 (Miss. 2007).

Although defendant argued that the indictment failed to expressly charge that he penetrated the victim with lustful intent, neither Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 nor Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-97(a) required proof of lustful intent; defendant's claim as to the sufficiency of the dates alleged in the indictment was waived for failure to demur the indictment in the court below. Frei v. State, 934 So. 2d 318 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

An indictment improperly omitted the essential element that the crime was without the victim's consent where the indictment asserted only that the defendant attempted to engage in sexual penetration of a female person in violation of § 97-3-95(1)(a). Hawthorne v. State, 751 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

4. Jury Instructions.

Giving of a jury instruction did not constitute error by allowing the jury to convict defendant on a broader definition of sexual battery than the crime alleged in the indictment because the jury was fairly and adequately instructed, and defendant was clearly convicted of the crime for which he was charged in the indictment; the disputed language in the instruction did not substantially alter the elements of proof necessary to find defendant guilty. Jones v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 477 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 6, 2013).

Defendant claimed that giving the supplemental instruction was an abuse of discretion because the instruction gave undue prominence to evidence concerning penetration without re-instructing the jury as to the other elements needed to establish the offense of rape and that, when plainly read, the supplemental instruction stated that the offense was established by penetration alone. While it certainly would have been better procedure to have reminded the jury that penetration was only one element of the offense and that all of the instructions, including the supplemental one, should have been considered, there was no reversible error; in that respect, the trial court did unmistakably tie the supplemental instruction to the other elements of rape listed in the original instruction and the supplemental instruction was not meant to encompass the entire offense of rape but was merely an explanation and clarification of one of the elements listed in the original jury instructions. Williams v. State, 928 So. 2d 867 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 257 (Miss. 2006).

5. Mentally defective person.

Conviction of sexual battery of a mentally deficient person, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(b), was affirmed because there was sufficient evidence that the victim suffered from a mental deficiency; among other things, the victim's special-education teacher and former mental-health therapist testified that the victim's IQ was 61 and that he was significantly cognitively disabled. Moreover, the testimony sufficiently showed that the victim's mental age was that of a young child. Santos v. State, 110 So. 3d 341 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

§ 97-3-99. Sexual battery; defense.

A person is not guilty of any offense under Sections 97-3-95 through 97-3-103 if the alleged victim is that person's legal spouse and at the time of the alleged offense such person and the alleged victim are not separated and living apart; provided, however, that the legal spouse of the alleged victim may be found guilty of sexual battery if the legal spouse engaged in forcible sexual penetration without the consent of the alleged victim.

1. In general.

A defendant was not immune from prosecution under this section for a sexual battery on his wife committed by another person, even though he may have been immune from prosecution had he alone committed the battery; this section did not give the defendant immunity since the sexual battery was committed by someone else and the defendant had aided and abetted its commission. Davis v. State, 611 So. 2d 906 (Miss. 1992).

2. Illustrative cases.

The marital exception did not exculpate the defendant from liability for sexual battery on his wife where he rendered her unconscious by lacing her food with drugs, physically undressed her, and then sexually penetrated her since all of those actions required some amount of force. Trigg v. State, 759 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

§ 97-3-101. Sexual battery; penalty.

(1) Every person who shall be convicted of sexual battery under Section 97-3-95(1)(a), (b), or (2) shall be imprisoned in the State Penitentiary for a period of not more than thirty (30) years, and for a second or subsequent such offense shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not more than forty (40) years.

(2)(a) Every person who shall be convicted of sexual battery under Section 97-3-95(1)(c) who is at least eighteen (18) but under twenty-one (21) years of age shall be imprisoned for not more than five (5) years in the State Penitentiary or fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or both;

(b) Every person who shall be convicted of sexual battery under Section 97-3-95(1)(c) who is twenty-one (21) years of age or older shall be imprisoned not more than thirty (30) years in the State Penitentiary or fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both, for the first offense, and not more than forty (40) years in the State Penitentiary for each subsequent offense.

(3) Every person who shall be convicted of sexual battery under Section 97-3-95(1)(d) who is eighteen (18) years of age or older shall be imprisoned for life in the State Penitentiary or such lesser term of imprisonment as the court may determine, but not less than twenty (20) years.

(4) Every person who shall be convicted of sexual battery who is thirteen (13) years of age or older but under eighteen (18) years of age shall be sentenced to such imprisonment, fine or other sentence as the court, in its discretion, may determine.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Sentence ranges.
3. Plea bargain.

1. In general.

The trial court sentenced the defendant within the limits of this section and did not abuse its discretion where the defendant was convicted of six counts of sexual battery and the trial court sentenced him to a term of 30 years on each count, with two of the sentences running consecutively and four running concurrently, making the term that he would have to serve 60 years. Williams v. State, 757 So. 2d 953 (Miss. 1999).

Fondling is not a lesser included offense of sexual battery. Brady v. State, 722 So. 2d 151 (Ct. App. 1998).

Trial court acted within its discretion by imposing 2 consecutive 20-year sentences for 2 sexual battery convictions and concurrent 20-year sentence for attempted sexual battery conviction. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

A sentence of 30 years in the state penitentiary was not disproportionate to the crime of sexual battery since 30 years' imprisonment is the maximum sentence which may be imposed upon a person convicted of sexual battery pursuant to § 97-3-101. Smith v. State, 569 So. 2d 1203 (Miss. 1990).

2. Sentence ranges.

Defendant's sentence of thirty-five years in prison, with thirty years to serve and five years suspended, followed by five years' supervised probation, without the possibility of parole, was permissible under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-3(1)(b), although Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101(3) did not expressly authorize day-for-day sentences and parole restrictions. Petty v. State, 118 So. 3d 659 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's sentence was not illegal, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101(3), because, for the attempted-sexual-battery count, defendant was sentenced to twelve years, with eight years of post-release supervision, which, when combined, was for twenty years and was within the statutory limits. Moore v. State, 112 So. 3d 1084 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's life sentence after he was convicted of sexual battery of child under the age of 14 was appropriate because it was constitutional, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101(3). Although there were certainly Mississippi cases where defendants were sentenced to less than life for the crime of sexual battery or other similar crimes, there were also numerous cases where life sentences were given for such crimes; the fact that other similarly situated defendants received lighter sentences did not prove that defendant's sentence was grossly disproportionate to the crime committed. Carter v. State, 996 So. 2d 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 43 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant was convicted of four counts of sexual battery for repeatedly sexually battering defendant's stepdaughter during a time period when she was 11 years of age by forcing her to engage in sex acts and sexual intercourse with defendant, and defendant was sentenced to two consecutive life sentences (the statutory maximum) and two consecutive 20-year terms; defendant also stated that he took pictures of the victim and possessed child pornography, and in light of the evidence put forth supporting defendant's guilt, and the nature of the crime of which defendant was convicted, defendant's sentences were not grossly disproportionate to the offenses or constitutionally violative. Evans v. State, 984 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 289 (Miss. 2008).

In a sexual battery case, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101(3) authorizes the maximum sentence to be life in prison, but does not require the jury to arrive at that verdict. Because the trial court acted within the limits of the statute and the statute did not require a finding by the jury, the procedure used by the trial court did not violate his due process rights because it did not fail to take into consideration certain factors in determining a proper sentence. Hobgood v. State, 926 So. 2d 847 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1118, 127 S. Ct. 928, 166 L. Ed. 2d 714, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 143, 75 U.S.L.W. 3350 (2007).

Appellate court concluded that defendant entered a guilty plea to the charge of sexual battery of a fourteen-year-old, and he received a thirty-year sentence; the term of incarceration was within the statutory guidelines, and defendant failed to present concrete facts to support his allegation that the sentence was unjust. Bates v. State, 914 So. 2d 297 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to sexual battery of a girl under the age of 14 under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(c), the fact that the inmate was not advised of a statutory minimum did not present grounds for postconviction relief, as under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-101, there was no statutory minimum sentence. Bryant v. State, 879 So. 2d 530 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

3. Plea bargain.

Where appellant was charged with sexual battery, his defense attorney was not ineffective for allowing him to plead guilty of aggravated assault. Aggravated assault is a lesser crime than sexual battery and carries a lower maximum sentence. Pearson v. State, 906 So. 2d 788 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Section 47-7-33 does not empower circuit judges to suspend sentences pursuant to Section 97-3-65(2)(c) and Section 97-3-101(3) because the latter sections each provide that a life sentence is the maximum sentence that may be imposed. Caranna, May 5, 2000, A.G. Op. #2000-0239.

Where defendant's 19-year-old daughter testified at trial that she and defendant had engaged in acts of fellatio and cunnilingus, defendant was properly indicted under § 97-29-59, and not § 97-3-95 et seq., which were enacted subsequent to the violation for which he was convicted, in that this section expressly provides that the sexual battery statutes do not repeal, modify or amend any other criminal statute. Contreras v. State, 445 So. 2d 543 (Miss. 1984).

in the statute. McDonald, Feb. 4, 2005, A.G. Op. 05-0017.

§ 97-3-107. Stalking; aggravated stalking; penalties; definitions.

(1)(a) Any person who purposefully engages in a course of conduct directed at a specific person, or who makes a credible threat, and who knows or should know that the conduct would cause a reasonable person to fear for his or her own safety, to fear for the safety of another person, or to fear damage or destruction of his or her property, is guilty of the crime of stalking.

(b) A person who is convicted of the crime of stalking under this section shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one (1) year or by a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(c) Any person who is convicted of a violation of this section when there is in effect at the time of the commission of the offense a valid temporary restraining order, ex parte protective order, protective order after hearing, court approved consent agreement, or an injunction issued by a municipal, justice, county, circuit or chancery court, federal or tribal court or by a foreign court of competent jurisdiction prohibiting the behavior described in this section against the same party, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one (1) year and by a fine of not more than One Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($1,500.00).

(2)(a) A person who commits acts that would constitute the crime of stalking as defined in this section is guilty of the crime of aggravated stalking if any of the following circumstances exist:

(i) At least one (1) of the actions constituting the offense involved the use or display of a deadly weapon with the intent to place the victim of the stalking in reasonable fear of death or great bodily injury to self or a third person;

(ii) Within the past seven (7) years, the perpetrator has been previously convicted of stalking or aggravated stalking under this section or a substantially similar law of another state, political subdivision of another state, of the United States, or of a federally recognized Indian tribe, whether against the same or another victim; or

(iii) At the time of the offense, the perpetrator was a person required to register as a sex offender pursuant to state, federal, military or tribal law and the victim was under the age of eighteen (18) years.

(b) Aggravated stalking is a felony punishable as follows:

(i) Except as provided in subparagraph (ii), by imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections for not more than five (5) years and a fine of not more than Three Thousand Dollars ($3,000.00).

(ii) If, at the time of the offense, the perpetrator was required to register as a sex offender pursuant to state, federal, military or tribal law, and the victim was under the age of eighteen (18) years, by imprisonment for not more than six (6) years in the custody of the Department of Corrections and a fine of Four Thousand Dollars ($4,000.00).

(3) Upon conviction, the sentencing court shall consider issuance of an order prohibiting the perpetrator from any contact with the victim. The duration of any order prohibiting contact with the victim shall be based upon the seriousness of the facts before the court, the probability of future violations, and the safety of the victim or another person.

(4) Every conviction of stalking or aggravated stalking may require as a condition of any suspended sentence or sentence of probation that the defendant, at his own expense, submit to psychiatric or psychological counseling or other such treatment or behavioral modification program deemed appropriate by the court.

(5) In any prosecution under this section, it shall not be a defense that the perpetrator was not given actual notice that the course of conduct was unwanted or that the perpetrator did not intend to cause the victim fear.

(6) When investigating allegations of a violation of this section, law enforcement officers shall utilize the Uniform Offense Report prescribed by the Office of the Attorney General in consultation with the sheriffs' and police chiefs' associations. However, failure of law enforcement to utilize the Uniform Offense Report shall in no way invalidate the crime charged under this section.

(7) For purposes of venue, any violation of this section shall be considered to have been committed in any county in which any single act was performed in furtherance of a violation of this section. An electronic communication shall be deemed to have been committed in any county from which the electronic communication is generated or in which it is received.

(8) For the purposes of this section:

(a) "Course of conduct" means a pattern of conduct composed of a series of two (2) or more acts over a period of time, however short, evidencing a continuity of purpose and that would cause a reasonable person to fear for his or her own safety, to fear for the safety of another person, or to fear damage or destruction of his or her property. Such acts may include, but are not limited to, the following or any combination thereof, whether done directly or indirectly: (i) following or confronting the other person in a public place or on private property against the other person's will; (ii) contacting the other person by telephone or mail, or by electronic mail or communication as defined in Section 97-45-1; or (iii) threatening or causing harm to the other person or a third party.

(b) "Credible threat" means a verbal or written threat to cause harm to a specific person or to cause damage to property that would cause a reasonable person to fear for the safety of that person or damage to the property.

(c) "Reasonable person" means a reasonable person in the victim's circumstances.

(9) The incarceration of a person at the time the threat is made shall not be a bar to prosecution under this section. Constitutionally protected activity is not prohibited by this section.

Editor's Note — Laws, 1992, ch. 532, § 2, effective from and after July 1, 1992, provides as follows:

"SECTION 2. The provisions of this act shall not be construed to disallow a prosecution for a criminal offense other than stalking against a person who is being or has been prosecuted for the offense of stalking, regardless of any differences in the degree of punishment which may be prescribed for the different offenses."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Right of trial by jury.
3. Sufficiency of the evidence.

1. In general.

Because it was clear that for a violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-107(4) to occur the offending conduct had to be intentional, and Miss. Code Ann. § 15-1-35 applied to all intentional torts that were substantially like those enumerated, stalking was subject to the one-year statute of limitations of § 15-1-35; because the employee did not file her complaint within one year of last alleged action by her supervisor, it was time-barred. Jones v. B.L. Dev. Corp., 940 So. 2d 961 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's display of pistol and his heated request for victim to shoot him, following his repeated threats against victim, constituted violation of stalking statute and was an unlawful act which would preclude defendant's use of accident as a defense to homicide charge. Nicholson ex rel. Gollott v. State, 672 So. 2d 744 (Miss. 1996).

2. Right of trial by jury.

Because the offense of stalking under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-107(1), with which defendant was being charged, was punishable by up to one year in jail, defendant had a right to a jury trial, a circuit court had no discretion to deny him that right and the circuit court erred in refusing defendant's request for a jury trial. Ude v. State, 992 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), remanded by 93 So. 3d 891, 2012 Miss. App. LEXIS 189 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012).

3. Sufficiency of the evidence.

Evidence, including that defendant repeatedly called the victim, visited her office, sent her gifts and food despite being told numerous times that he was not to have any contact with the victim; the victim's testimony that she confronted defendant about his behavior and told him that she did not wish to have any contact with him, that he became angry and violent, and that he yelled at her; and other testimony that defendant refused to obey numerous specific directives that he stay away from the victim, was sufficient evidence for a circuit court to have found defendant guilty of stalking. Ude v. State, 992 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), remanded by 93 So. 3d 891, 2012 Miss. App. LEXIS 189 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

No legal precedent requires charges under the statute to be based upon a threat made directly to the victim; thus, where threats are made to an officer and the officer believes the individual is capable of carrying out the threat, then the facts may be such that would substantiate the definition of "credible threat." Boone, Apr. 23, 2001, A.G. Op. #01-0215.

§ 97-3-109. Drive-by shooting; drive-by bombing.

(1) A person is guilty of a drive-by shooting if he attempts, other than for lawful self-defense, to cause serious bodily injury to another, or causes such injury purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life by discharging a firearm while in or on a vehicle.

(2) A person is guilty of a drive-by bombing if he attempts to cause serious bodily injury to another or attempts to cause damage to the property of another, or causes such injury or damage purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life by throwing or ejecting any bomb or explosive device from a vehicle while in or on the vehicle.

(3) A person convicted of violating subsection (1) or (2) of this section shall be punished by commitment to the custody of the State Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed thirty (30) years and a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00). A drive-by shooting or a drive-by bombing shall be a felony.

(4) This section shall not be construed to restrict the power to apprehend or arrest a person committing an offense if such apprehension or arrest is otherwise lawful.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Indictment.
2. Evidence.
3. Essential elements.

1. Indictment.

Trial court did not err in dismissing appellant's motion for post-conviction relief because his indictment was legally sufficient; by setting forth the statutory section charged, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-109(1), which was the applicable statute for drive-by shooting, the indictment gave appellant sufficient notice, meeting the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 and due process. Byers v. State, 107 So. 3d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

The trial court committed reversible error by granting an instruction on the elements of the crime of drive-by shooting that contained an additional charge for reckless indifference that was not included in the indictment. Smith v. State, 754 So. 2d 1159 (Miss. 2000).

The indictment was not required to include the element of lack of self-defense where the jury was properly instructed that it had to find that defendants were not acting in self-defense before convicting them of the charge, and the evidence supported the jury's finding that the defendants were not acting in self-defense. Smith v. State, 754 So. 2d 1159 (Miss. 2000).

The omission of the phrases "purposely or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life" and "other than for lawful self defense" did not render an indictment fatally defective. Moore v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 204 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), reversed by, remanded by 754 So. 2d 1159, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 2 (Miss. 2000).

An indictment for a drive-by shooting was sufficient where it charged that the defendant unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and knowingly caused serious bodily injury to victim by discharging a firearm while in a vehicle and thus striking the victim, with bullets fired from the firearm. Smith v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 126 (Miss. Ct. App. Mar.

23, 1999), reversed by, remanded by 754 So. 2d 1159, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 2 (Miss. 2000).

2. Evidence.

Jury could reasonably find defendant guilty of the crime of drive-by shooting where the victim testified that defendant was inside the car when the shot was fired and the fact that a bullet matching the gun fired by defendant was found lodged in the victim's car, which had been parked outside his apartment, bolstered the victim's testimony that he had not stepped outside of his doorway and that defendant was pointing the gun in his direction; therefore, the trial judge did not err in denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Richardson v. State, 875 So. 2d 1106 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was held sufficient to establish that the defendant intended to cause serious bodily injury to another. Fox v. State, 724 So. 2d 968 (Ct. App. 1998).

3. Essential elements.

In order to obtain a valid conviction of a defendant for felony murder while engaged in the crime of drive-by shooting, the State is required to prove all essential elements of both Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(1)(c) and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-109(1). Thus, the State is required to prove under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-109(1) that the defendant caused serious bodily injury to another purposely, knowingly or recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life by discharging a firearm while in or on a vehicle. Boyd v. State, 977 So. 2d 329 (Miss. 2008).

§ 97-3-110. Seizure and forfeiture of firearms unlawfully possessed by juveniles and of motor vehicles used in drive-by shootings or bombings.

(1) Whenever a person under eighteen (18) years of age is unlawfully in possession of a firearm, the firearm shall be seized and, after an adjudication of delinquency or conviction, shall be subject to forfeiture.

(2) Whenever a person under eighteen (18) years of age unlawfully discharges a firearm in or throws or ejects a bomb from a motor vehicle in violation of Section 97-3-109, Mississippi Code of 1972, the motor vehicle shall be subject to seizure and, after an adjudication of delinquency or conviction, be subject to forfeiture pursuant to the procedures set forth in Section 97-3-111, Mississippi Code of 1972.

§ 97-3-111. Forfeiture of vehicles used in drive-by shootings or bombings.

(1) All vehicles which are used in any manner to facilitate the discharging of a firearm or the throwing or ejection of a bomb or explosive device in violation of Section 97-3-109 shall be subject to forfeiture, however:

(a) No conveyance used by any person as a common carrier in the transaction of business as a common carrier is subject to forfeiture under this section unless it appears that the owner or other person in charge of the conveyance is a consenting party or privy to a violation of Section 97-3-109 and this section;

(b) No conveyance is subject to forfeiture under this section by reason of any act or omission proved by the owner thereof to have been committed or omitted without his knowledge or consent; if the confiscating authority has reason to believe that the conveyance is a leased or rented conveyance, then the confiscating authority shall notify the owner of the conveyance within five (5) days of the confiscation;

(c) A forfeiture of a conveyance encumbered by a bona fide security interest is subject to the interest of the secured party if he neither had knowledge of nor consented to the act or omission.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (16), when any property is seized pursuant to subsection (1), proceedings under this section shall be instituted promptly.

(3) A petition for forfeiture shall be filed promptly in the name of the State of Mississippi, the county or the municipality and may be filed in the county in which the seizure is made, the county in which the criminal prosecution is brought or the county in which the owner of the seized property is found. Forfeiture proceedings may be brought in (a) the circuit court, or (b) the county court if a county court exists in the county and the value of the seized property is within the jurisdictional limits of the county court as set forth in Section 9-9-21, Mississippi Code of 1972, or (c) the youth court in the case of a person adjudicated delinquent where the underlying basis for the delinquency is a violation of Section 97-3-109, Mississippi Code of 1972. A copy of such petition shall be served upon the following persons by service of process in the same manner as in civil cases:

(a) The owner of the property, if address is known;

(b) Any secured party who has registered his lien or filed a financing statement as provided by law, if the identity of such secured party can be ascertained by the local law enforcement agency by making a good faith effort to ascertain the identity of such secured party as described in subsections (4), (5), (6), (7) and (8) of this section;

(c) Any other bona fide lienholder or secured party or other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest of whom the local law enforcement agency has actual knowledge; and

(d) Any person in possession of property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized.

(4) If the property is a motor vehicle susceptible of titling under the Mississippi Motor Vehicle Title Law and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle has been titled, the local law enforcement agency shall make inquiry of the State Tax Commission as to what the records of the State Tax Commission show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien or security interest which affects the vehicle.

(5) If the property is a motor vehicle and is not titled in the State of Mississippi, then the local law enforcement agency shall attempt to ascertain the name and address of the person in whose name the vehicle is licensed, and if the vehicle is licensed in a state which has in effect a certificate of title law, the local law enforcement agency shall make inquiry of the appropriate agency of that state as to what the records of the agency show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien, security interest or other instrument in the nature of a security device which affects the vehicle.

(6) In the event the answer to an inquiry states that the record owner of the property is any person other than the person who was in possession of it when it was seized, or states that any person holds any lien, encumbrance, security interest or other interest which affects the property, the local law enforcement agency shall cause any record owner and also any lienholder, secured party or other person who holds an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest which affects the property to be named in the petition of forfeiture and to be served with process in the same manner as in civil cases.

(7) If the owner of the property cannot be found and served with a copy of the petition of forfeiture, or if no person was in possession of the property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized and the owner of the property is unknown, the local law enforcement agency shall file with the clerk of the court in which the proceeding is pending an affidavit to such effect, whereupon the clerk of the court shall publish notice of the hearing addressed to "the Unknown Owner of _____", filling in the blank space with a reasonably detailed description of the property subject to forfeiture. Service by publication shall contain the other requisites prescribed in Section 11-33-41, Mississippi Code of 1972, and shall be served as provided in Section 11-33-37, Mississippi Code of 1972, for publication of notice for attachments at law.

(8) No proceedings instituted pursuant to the provisions of this section shall proceed to hearing unless the judge conducting the hearing is satisfied that this section has been complied with. Any answer received from an inquiry required by subsections (4) through (5) of this section shall be introduced into evidence at the hearing.

(9) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (16), an owner of property that has been seized pursuant to subsection (1) shall file an answer within thirty (30) days after the completion of service of process. If an answer is not filed, the court shall hear evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture and forfeit the property to the local law enforcement agency. If an answer is filed, a time for hearing on forfeiture shall be set within thirty (30) days of filing the answer or at the succeeding term of court, if court would not be in progress within thirty (30) days after filing the answer. Provided, however, that upon request by the local law enforcement agency or the owner of the property, the court may postpone said forfeiture hearing to a date past the time any criminal action is pending against said owner.

(10) If the owner of the property has filed an answer denying that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the burden is on the petitioner to prove that the property is subject to forfeiture. However, if an answer has not been filed by the owner of the property, the petition for forfeiture may be introduced into evidence and is prima facie evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture. The standard of proof placed upon the petitioner in regard to property forfeited under the provisions of Section 97-3-109 and this section shall be by a preponderance of the evidence.

(11) At the hearing any claimant of any right, title or interest in the property may prove his lien, encumbrance, security interest or other interest in the nature of a security interest to be bona fide and created without knowledge or consent that the property was to be used so as to cause the property to be subject to forfeiture.

(12) If it is found that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the judge shall forfeit the property to the local law enforcement agency. However, if proof at the hearing discloses that the interest of any bona fide lienholder, secured party or other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest is greater than or equal to the present value of the property, the court shall order the property released to him. If such interest is less than the present value of the property and if the proof shows that the property is subject to forfeiture, the court shall order the property forfeited to the local law enforcement agency.

(13) All other property which is forfeited under this section shall be liquidated and, after deduction of court costs and the expenses of liquidation, the proceeds shall be divided and deposited as follows:

(a) In the event only one (1) law enforcement agency participates in the underlying criminal case out of which the forfeiture arises, fifty percent (50%) of the proceeds shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited in the General Fund of the state and fifty percent (50%) of the proceeds shall be deposited and credited to the budget of the participating law enforcement agency.

(b) In the event more than one (1) law enforcement agency participates in the underlying criminal case out of which the forfeiture arises, fifty percent (50%) of the proceeds shall be deposited and credited to the budget of the law enforcement agency whose officers initiated the criminal case and fifty percent (50%) shall be divided equitably between or among the other participating law enforcement agencies, and shall be deposited and credited to the budgets of the participating law enforcement agencies. In the event that the other participating law enforcement agencies cannot agree on the division of their fifty percent (50%), a petition shall be filed by any one (1) of them in the court in which the civil forfeiture case is brought and the court shall make an equitable division.

(14) All other property that has been forfeited shall, except as otherwise provided, be sold at a public auction for cash by the chief law enforcement officer of the initiating law enforcement agency, or his designee, to the highest and best bidder after advertising the sale for at least once each week for three (3) consecutive weeks, the last notice to appear not more than ten (10) days nor less than five (5) days prior to such sale, in a newspaper having a general circulation in the jurisdiction in which said law enforcement agency is located. Such notices shall contain a description of the property to be sold and a statement of the time and place of sale. It shall not be necessary to the validity of such sale either to have the property present at the place of sale or to have the name of the owner thereof stated in such notice. The proceeds of the sale shall be disposed of as follows:

(a) To any bona fide lienholder, secured party or other party holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest, to the extent of his interest; and

(b) The balance, if any, remaining after deduction of all storage, court costs and expenses of liquidation shall be divided, forwarded and deposited in the same manner set out in subsection (13) of this section.

(15) The State Tax Commission shall issue a certificate of title to any person who purchases property under the provisions of this section when a certificate of title is required under the laws of this state.

(16) When any property the value of which does not exceed Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) is seized pursuant to subsection (1), the property may be forfeited by the administrative forfeiture procedures provided for in subsections (16) through (22).

(17) The attorney for the seizing law enforcement agency shall provide notice of intention to forfeit the seized property administratively, by certified mail, return receipt requested, to all persons who are required to be notified.

(18) In the event that notice of intention to forfeit the seized property administratively cannot be given as provided in subsection (17) of this section because of refusal, failure to claim, insufficient address or any other reason, the attorney for the seizing law enforcement agency shall provide notice by publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the seizure occurred for once a week for three (3) consecutive weeks.

(19) Notice pursuant to subsections (17) and (18) of this section shall include the following information:

(a) A description of the property;

(b) The approximate value of the property;

(c) The date and place of the seizure;

(d) The connection between the property and the violation of Section 97-3-109;

(e) The instructions for filing a request for judicial review; and

(f) A statement that the property will be forfeited to the seizing law enforcement agency if a request for judicial review is not timely filed.

(20) Persons claiming an interest in the seized property may initiate judicial review of the seizure and proposed forfeiture by filing a request for judicial review with the attorney for the seizing law enforcement agency, within thirty (30) days after receipt of the certified letter or within thirty (30) days after the first publication of notice, whichever is applicable.

(21) If no request for judicial review is timely filed, the attorney for the seizing law enforcement agency shall prepare a written declaration of forfeiture of the subject property and the forfeited property shall be used, distributed or disposed of in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(22) Upon receipt of a timely request for judicial review, the attorney for the seizing law enforcement agency shall promptly file a petition for forfeiture and proceed as provided in subsections (3) through (15).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Immediate actual possession found.
3. Possession may be actual or constructive.

1. In general.

Fair minded jurors could have accepted defendant's assertion that there was no common plan to commit a carjacking in Mississippi, and that he was merely a bystander. They also could have inferred from his actions of stealing a car earlier, on the same date, with his companions that did conduct the carjacking, that he was an active participant; thus, his admission to the earlier theft was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to deny his motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Washington v. State, 912 So. 2d 996 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Actual possession for purposes of a carjacking charge is the physical occupancy or control over property. Murphy v. State, 868 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 868 So. 2d 345, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 297 (Miss. 2004).

2. Immediate actual possession found.

State proved that defendant took from the victim's immediate actual possession a car for purposes of a carjacking charge where: (1) the victim was sitting in the passenger seat with the keys in the ignition, (2) the victim could easily have swung her legs over and driven the car away, (3) at the time of defendant's approach, the victim quite literally had direct physical control of the car, and (4) clearly, the victim occupied the vehicle at the time defendant seized it as she was in possession of the vehicle, and she had control of the running vehicle at the time it was seized. Murphy v. State, 868 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 868 So. 2d 345, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 297 (Miss. 2004).

3. Possession may be actual or constructive.

Virginia Court of Appeals has stated that possession of a vehicle for purposes of carjacking may be actual or constructive; constructive possession occurs where an individual has the means of exercising dominion or control over the vehicle. Murphy v. State, 868 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 868 So. 2d 345, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 297 (Miss. 2004).

The following words and phrases shall have the meanings ascribed herein unless the context clearly indicates otherwise:

(a) "Carjacking" means taking of a motor vehicle from another person's immediate actual possession knowingly or recklessly by force or violence, whether against resistance or by sudden or stealthy seizure or snatching, or by putting in fear, or attempting to do so, or by any other means.

(b) "Motor vehicle" includes every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, which is self-propelled.

1. Immediate actual possession defined.

In defining “immediate actual possession” for purposes of carjacking, the court of appeals in the District of Columbia has stated that a thing is within one’s immediate actual possession so long as it is within such range that he could, if not deterred by violence or fear, retain actual physical control over it; the court of appeals in the District of Columbia has held, in agreement with the District of Columbia Circuit, that immediate actual possession is retained if the car is within such range that the victim could, if not deterred by violence or fear, retain actual physical control over it. Murphy v. State, 868 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 868 So. 2d 345, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 297 (Miss. 2004).

§ 97-3-117. Mississippi Carjacking Act; what constitutes offense of carjacking; attempted carjacking; armed carjacking; penalties.

(1) Whoever shall knowingly or recklessly by force or violence, whether against resistance or by sudden or stealthy seizure or snatching, or by putting in fear, or attempting to do so, or by any other means shall take a motor vehicle from another person’s immediate actual possession shall be guilty of carjacking.

(a) A person who is convicted of carjacking shall be fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) and be committed to the custody of the State Department of Corrections for not more than fifteen (15) years.

(b) A person who is convicted of attempted carjacking shall receive the same punishment as the person who is convicted of carjacking.

(2) Whoever commits the offense of carjacking while armed with or having readily available any pistol or other firearm or imitation thereof or other dangerous or deadly weapon, including a sawed-off shotgun, shotgun, machine gun, rifle, dirk, bowie knife, butcher knife, switchblade, razor, blackjack, billy, or metallic or other false knuckles, or any object capable of inflicting death or serious bodily harm, shall be guilty of armed carjacking.

(a) Any person who is convicted of armed carjacking shall be fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) and be committed to the custody of the State Department of Corrections for not more than thirty (30) years.

(b) Any person who is convicted of attempted armed carjacking shall receive the same punishment as the person who is convicted of armed carjacking.

(3) Any person convicted of a second or subsequent offense under this section shall be fined an amount up to twice that otherwise authorized and shall be imprisoned for a term up to twice the term otherwise authorized.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence.
2. Indictment.
3. Jury instructions.
4. Double jeopardy.
5. Sentence.

1. Evidence.

Evidence, though circumstantial, was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for carjacking, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-117(1), because an investigator testified that defendant was implicated as being present at the scene on the morning of the attack; a photograph of defendant's mother was recovered from the vehicle after it was located in Texas, where defendant had relatives; and (3) a piece of paper with defendant's Social Security number written on it was found in the vehicle that was left at the scene. Moses v. State, 30 So. 3d 391 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the state proved all of the elements of a carjacking; the legislature did not intend Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-117 to be construed so literally as to mean that a person committed a carjacking only when an individual was physically inside the vehicle, and the evidence showed that the victim had just retrieved some money from the vehicle and had her keys in her hand when defendant approached her, defendant demanded the keys from her, snatched them out of her hand, and drove off. Young v. State, 962 So. 2d 110 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed carjacking where the victims, when presented with a photo lineup, picked out defendant and all three identified defendant in court as the black-shirted carjacker; the eyewitness testimony was corroborated by defendant's conduct during the police chase. Jackson v. State, 969 So. 2d 124 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant fit the description of the perpetrator, his car fit the description of the two-toned vehicle that followed the victim, and eyewitnesses testified to seeing a car similar to the victim's parked behind defendant's grandparents' home on the morning following the carjacking, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of armed carjacking under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-117(2)(b). Walters v. State, 932 So. 2d 860 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 937 So. 2d 450, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 524 (Miss. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for armed carjacking where (1) the testimony presented by the state reflected that the defendant participated in and was involved in planning and committing several crimes, including the armed carjacking, (2) the testimony presented by the defense showed that he was not identified as one of the carjackers and was not involved in the commission of the carjacking, and (3) the conflicting testimony was a question of fact resolved by the jury in favor of the state. Simmons v. State, 754 So. 2d 618 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

2. Indictment.

In a carjacking case, even though an indictment and a jury instruction lacked the specific language "from another person's immediate actual possession," as set forth in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-117(1), they were sufficient because the use of the name of the victim was the equivalent of such. Therefore, there was no due process violation, and defense counsel was not ineffective for submitting the instruction to the jury. Perryman v. State, 16 So. 3d 41 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 404 (Miss. 2009).

An indictment charged the defendant with carjacking, rather than armed carjacking, where the indictment read, in part, that the defendant "did recklessly and knowingly by force or violence, by the exhibition of a knife, take a motor vehicle from" the victim; the indictment did not charge the defendant with armed carjacking since it failed to allege the essential elements relative to the alleged use of the knife. Williams v. State, 772 So. 2d 406 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Although the technical language of the statute for the crime of carjacking may not have been recited in the indictment, the statute was enumerated and the facts that were stated were sufficient to notify the defendant of the crime he was being charged with, therefore allowing him the opportunity to prepare a defense where the indictment stated that he was being charged with the crime of carjacking because he “did recklessly and knowingly by force or violence, by the exhibition of a knife, take a motor vehicle from” the victim. Williams v. State, 772 So. 2d 406 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

3. Jury instructions.

Jury instructions were insufficient with regard to armed carjacking where the jury was instructed that the state was required to prove that the defendant took an automobile by the exhibition of a knife, but was not instructed that the knife was a deadly weapon capable of inflicting death or serious bodily injury; however, the jury instructions were sufficient with regard to carjacking. Williams v. State, 772 So. 2d 406 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

4. Double jeopardy.

Convictions for armed carjacking and armed robbery occurring during the same episode did not constitute double jeopardy where the carjacking charge was based on the taking of a delivery truck and the robbery charge was based on the theft of money from one of the occupants of the truck. McCline v. State, 856 So. 2d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 860 So. 2d 315, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 722 (Miss. 2003).

5. Sentence.

Defendant’s act of carjacking per se involved conduct that presented a serious potential risk of physical violence to another, and therefore any conviction for carjacking constituted a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person for purposes of aggravating circumstances in a death penalty case. Galloway v. State, 122 So. 3d 614 (Miss. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 189 L. Ed. 2d 209, 2014 U.S. LEXIS 3685, 82 U.S.L.W. 3685 (U.S. 2014).

Defendant’s sentence to thirty years’ incarceration, with ten years suspended, for armed carjacking was not excessive because the sentence was within statutorily prescribed limits. Clark v. State, 54 So. 3d 304 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

In a carjacking case, a trial court erred by imposing a 30-year sentence, even though defendant was a habitual offender, because this was in excess of the maximum sentence of 15 years for that crime. Perryman v. State, 16 So. 3d 41 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 404 (Miss. 2009).

Consecutive sentences of 30 and 45 years for armed carjacking and armed robbery were within the statutory limits for those offenses and were not excessive despite the length of the sentences and regardless of the fact that defendant chose to go to trial rather than accept a plea bargain for 10 years on each count as his co-defendants elected to do. McCline v. State, 856 So. 2d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 860 So. 2d 315, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 722 (Miss. 2003).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Proof of abandonment in a habeas corpus proceeding by a mother to obtain custody of a minor child does not require that the evidence show an abandonment as that term is defined in this section [Code 1942, § 2050] or to show that the parent has been guilty of child desertion such as would render him liable to criminal prosecution under Code 1942, § 2087. Governale v. Haley, 228 Miss. 271, 87 So. 2d 686 (1956).

1. In general.

The retroactive application of the 1995 amendment to the statute, which substantively changed the elements of the crime by deleting the requirement of proving that the children were left in destitute and necessitous circumstances and raising the age of the children protected, violated the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws. Knowles v. State, 708 So. 2d 549 (Miss. 1998).

The court could lawfully convict the defendant for the crime of willful failure to support and maintain his children under the statute without violating the double jeopardy clause, notwithstanding that he had previously been found not to be in civil contempt for failing to make support payments. Knowles v. State, 708 So. 2d 549 (Miss. 1998).

Former wife improperly obtained process over her former husband to enforce judgment for child support arrearage by bringing criminal charges solely for purpose of bringing him to state to obtain personal jurisdiction in civil contempt action; she brought charges against him for desertion of child under age 16, when her youngest child was 24 years of age, solely to obtain personal jurisdiction. Shook v. Hopkins, 697 So. 2d 1162 (Miss. 1997).

In a prosecution for child desertion under this section the fact that the jury saw the defendant's grievously afflicted child in the corridors of the courthouse did not constitute error, even though the judge had excluded her from the courtroom to avoid undue prejudice against the defendant because of the child's affliction; it would not have been error for the court to permit the jury to see the child since this was clearly relevant to the State's case in proving the child's helpless condition and her dire need of financial support. Additionally, the State made no effort to make a prominent display of the child before the jury and there was no error committed by the jury simply seeing the child. Bryant v. State, 567 So. 2d 234 (Miss. 1990).

One charged under this statute [Code 1942, § 2087] should be permitted to withdraw a plea of guilty entered without an investigation by the trial judge as to whether he has been properly advised. Lambert v. State, 245 Miss. 227, 147 So. 2d 480 (1962).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2087] the gist of the crime is the willful failure to provide for the support and maintenance of the children and the statutory offense is a continuing one. Kelley v. State, 218 Miss. 459, 67 So. 2d 459, 44 A.L.R.2d 881 (1953).

The application of this section [Code 1942, § 2087] is not limited only to cases when father leaves the jurisdiction of the state. Kelley v. State, 218 Miss. 459, 67 So. 2d 459, 44 A.L.R.2d 881 (1953).

Where the husband was guilty of statutory offense of desertion of and willful failure to support his children, and the mother then leaves her husband and moves to a different county, the removal of the children by the wife did not relieve the father of his responsibilities. Kelley v. State, 218 Miss. 459, 67 So. 2d 459, 44 A.L.R.2d 881 (1953).

Where in prosecution for nonsupport of children the fact that the proof showed that the necessitous circumstances of the children were relieved by their neighbors and church organization and the county welfare department did not preclude the prosecution of the father. Archer v. State, 214 Miss. 742, 59 So. 2d 339 (1952).

To establish willful neglect to support minor children state must allege and prove either desertion of children who were in destitute and necessitous circumstances, or willful neglect to support them. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

Father, who had deposited in bank to credit of two children under 16 years of age approximately $500, available to them, could not be convicted of neglecting to provide for their support. Ladner v. State, 165 Miss. 140, 146 So. 888 (1933).

Neglect or refusal to provide for support and maintenance of children, to constitute criminal offense, must be willful. Page v. State, 160 Miss. 300, 133 So. 216 (1931).

"Willful" neglect or refusal to support children means neglect or refusal with stubborn purpose and without justifiable excuse. Page v. State, 160 Miss. 300, 133 So. 216 (1931).

2. Jurisdiction.

This section is not an unconstitutional infringement upon chancery court jurisdiction, nor is it imprisonment for debt. The State has a legitimate interest in criminally prosecuting financially able parents who willfully desert or fail to support their children when in destitute or necessitous circumstances. Bryant v. State, 567 So. 2d 234 (Miss. 1990).

This section does not usurp jurisdiction of chancery court. Kelley v. State, 218 Miss. 459, 67 So. 2d 459, 44 A.L.R.2d 881 (1953).

County court to which circuit court has transferred criminal case for trial has right to proceed with prosecution of father for desertion and failure to support child, although chancery court had acquired jurisdiction in matter prior to commencement of prosecution through divorce action brought by mother against father. Williams v. State, 207 Miss. 816, 43 So. 2d 389 (1949), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

3. Indictment.

The parentage of the child alleged to have been neglected is a material part of the crime defined by this section [Code 1442, § 2087]. Gladney v. State, 246 Miss. 584, 151 So. 2d 606 (1963).

In prosecution for desertion and neglecting to provide for minor children, an indictment which charged that the defendant did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously, desert and willfully neglect and refuse to support his minor children of the names and ages as follows, naming them and giving their ages, was sufficient to charge that the defendant was the father of the children. Fortenberry v. State, 227 Miss. 666, 86 So. 2d 663 (1956).

Where an indictment, charging a father with neglect to provide for the support and maintenance of his children failed to state the year in which the offense was committed, and where a demurrer was interposed, it was not error for the court to permit an amendment so as to state the year and overrule the demurrer. Archer v. State, 214 Miss. 742, 59 So. 2d 339 (1952).

Indictment alleging that father did willfully desert "and neglect" child under age of 16 years, leaving it in destitute and necessitous circumstances, held to charge offense of child desertion, desertion of a child leaving it destitute implying "non-support," words "and neglect" being surplusage. Horton v. State, 175 Miss. 687, 166 So. 753 (1936).

4. Bar of limitations.

Offense of child desertion is a continuing one, so that prosecution therefore was not barred by three-year statute of limitations, where father deserted family more than two years before prosecution was commenced, but never returned. Horton v. State, 175 Miss. 687, 166 So. 753 (1936).

5. Evidence; generally.

Evidence held insufficient to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Thomas v. State, 247 Miss. 704, 159 So. 2d 77 (1963).

Evidence held to warrant finding of refusal and neglect to support child. Evans v. State, 242 Miss. 428, 135 So. 2d 174 (1961).

In a habeas corpus proceeding by a mother to obtain custody of a minor child, to prove abandonment it is not necessary that the evidence show an abandonment as that term is defined [Code 1942, § 2050], or to show that the parent has been guilty of child desertion, such as would render him liable to criminal prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2087]. Governale v. Haley, 228 Miss. 271, 87 So. 2d 686 (1956).

In prosecution of parent for failure to support and maintain child, it is incumbent upon prosecution to show beyond every reasonable doubt that child was left in destitute or necessitous circumstances and proof should do more than tend to show that child was in destitute or necessitous circumstances so far as any contribution made to it by defendant is concerned. Williams v. State, 207 Miss. 816, 43 So. 2d 389 (1949), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

Where proof shows willful neglect to provide support, desertion within usual and ordinary meaning of term need not be shown. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

Evidence held to sustain conviction for willfully neglecting to support children. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

6. —Admissibility.

It was no error for the state to adduce evidence as to the continued neglect and support of the children after the original desertion, since the offense charged was a continuous one. Fortenberry v. State, 227 Miss. 666, 86 So. 2d 663 (1956).

Where a mother was charged under this section [Code 1942, § 2087], evidence that the mother was forced to leave the home where her children and husband lived because of mistreatment by the husband should have been admitted. Nobles v. State, 223 Miss. 24, 77 So. 2d 674 (1955), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

Since the offense under this section [Code 1942, § 2087] is a continuing one, evidence of accused's conduct or neglect of a child before and after the time charged was admissible to show intent and motive, and as tending to show the commission of the offense charged, and as to whether or not it was committed at or about the time charged. Nobles v. State, 223 Miss. 24, 77 So. 2d 674 (1955), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

Where a premature or a six months baby was begotten after separation of a month, the husband should be permitted to prove non-access to the mother of the child after the separation. Boone v. State, 211 Miss. 318, 51 So. 2d 473 (1951).

Testimony offered by prosecution and by defendant which covers period of four and one-half years prior to return of indictment incompetent, since alleged offense is continuing one, and it is error for court to confine testimony on behalf of defendant to period of two years prior to return of indictment. Williams v. State, 207 Miss. 816, 43 So. 2d 389 (1949), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

Under indictment charging that defendant father both deserted and failed to provide for support and maintenance of child, it is error to exclude testimony offered by defendant to show facts and circumstances under which he failed to live with and support child tending to show that he was kept away from it by repeated personal assaults committed on him by his brother-in-law while child was living with its maternal grandmother and mother. Williams v. State, 207 Miss. 816, 43 So. 2d 389 (1949), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

It was proper for state to show failure to support children was due to improper diversion of funds. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

Testimony contradicting defendant's denial of misconduct with another woman, held not reversible error where not objected to as attempt to prove separate and distinct offense. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

After state rested its case in chief, in prosecution for child desertion, and defendant had introduced evidence in defense, admitting, in rebuttal, testimony that defendant had admitted he was father of children, held not error. Roney v. State, 167 Miss. 827, 150 So. 774 (1933).

7. —Presumptions and burden of proof.

In a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2087], there is a presumption of innocence, and guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Gladney v. State, 246 Miss. 584, 151 So. 2d 606 (1963).

Burden of proving that there has been willful neglect or refusal to support and maintain child is upon state, and not on accused to prove that his action was excusable or justifiable in such neglect or refusal. Williams v. State, 207 Miss. 816, 43 So. 2d 389 (1949), overruled on other grounds, Lenoir v. State, 237 Miss. 620, 115 So. 2d 731 (1959).

Burden of proving that willful neglect or refusal to support children was excusable or justifiable is not on defendant, not being defensive matter. Page v. State, 160 Miss. 300, 133 So. 216 (1931).

8. Witnesses.

Where defendant attempted to explain why he was separated from wife and consented to wife stating her side of the matter, error if any in permitting wife to testify held not reversible. Clark v. State, 181 Miss. 455, 180 So. 602 (1938).

Wife is incompetent to testify against husband in criminal case, otherwise than as permitted to do so under common law; wife was not competent witness against husband in prosecution under law relating to desertion or refusal to provide for support and maintenance of child. Ulmer v. State, 157 Miss. 807, 128 So. 749 (1930).

9. Instructions.

In a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2087], it is error to instruct the jury as to the presumption of legitimacy of a child born in wedlock, without stating that such presumption is rebuttable, particularly where the evidence of paternity is in sharp conflict and the jury could have decided the case without the benefit of presumptions. Gladney v. State, 246 Miss. 584, 151 So. 2d 606 (1963).

§ 97-5-5. Enticing child for concealment, prostitution or marriage.

Every person who shall maliciously, willfully, or fraudulently lead, take, carry away, decoy or entice away, any child under the age of fourteen (14) years, with intent to detain or conceal such child from its parents, guardian, or other person having lawful charge of such child, or for the purpose of prostitution, concubinage, or marriage, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections for not less than two (2) years nor more than ten (10) years, or fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Sexual intercourse is not essential to the commission of the offense of taking a 13-year-old girl away for the purpose of concubinage. Hooks v. State, 197 So. 2d 238 (Miss. 1967).

On the trial of a defendant indicted for the crime of enticing a child under the age of 14 years for the felonious purpose of "concubinage or marriage", it was error for the prosecution to cross examine a witness introduced by the state unless there was a showing that the prosecuting attorney had been taken by surprise. Hooks v. State, 197 So. 2d 238 (Miss. 1967).

A father who by agreement surrendered the custody of his minor child to his wife is not guilty of kidnapping because he enticed the child away from the custody of the mother. State v. Powe, 107 Miss. 770, 66 So. 207 (1914).

§ 97-5-11. Pool room or billiard hall; certain minors prohibited from entering.

No person under the age of eighteen (18) years shall be allowed to enter and remain in any poolroom or billiard hall except that municipalities shall have the discretion to establish a lower minimum age. However, no person under the age of eighteen (18) years shall be allowed to enter and remain in any poolroom or billiard hall in which beer is sold or consumed. No owner or manager of any poolroom or billiard hall, and no agent or employee of any such owner or manager, shall permit or allow any person under the age of eighteen (18) years to enter and remain in any such poolroom or billiard hall except when a municipality has established a lower minimum age, and provided that in such municipality beer is neither sold nor consumed in such poolroom or billiard hall. Any manager or owner of any poolroom or billiard hall, and any agent or employee of such owner or manager, shall for each offense, upon conviction, be fined not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00).

(1) Any person above the age of eighteen (18) years, who, for the purpose of gratifying his or her lust, or indulging his or her depraved licentious sexual desires, shall handle, touch or rub with hands or any part of his or her body or any member thereof, any child under the age of sixteen (16) years, with or without the child's consent, or a mentally defective, mentally incapacitated or physically helpless person as defined in Section 97-3-97, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) nor more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or be committed to the custody of the State Department of Corrections not less than two (2) years nor more than fifteen (15) years, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

(2) Any person above the age of eighteen (18) years, who, for the purpose of gratifying his or her lust, or indulging his or her depraved licentious sexual desires, shall handle, touch or rub with hands or any part of his or her body or any member thereof, any child younger than himself or herself and under the age of eighteen (18) years who is not such person's spouse, with or without the child's consent, when the person occupies a position of trust or authority over the child shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) nor more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or be committed to the custody of the State Department of Corrections not less than two (2) years nor more than fifteen (15) years, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court. A person in a position of trust or authority over a child includes without limitation a child's teacher, counselor, physician, psychiatrist, psychologist, minister, priest, physical therapist, chiropractor, legal guardian, parent, stepparent, aunt, uncle, scout leader or coach.

(3) Upon a second conviction for an offense under this section, the person so convicted shall be punished by commitment to the State Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed twenty (20) years, however, upon

Defendant's right against double-jeopardy was not violated because, while the counts for fondling, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1), and the attempted-sexual-battery, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-7, stemmed from the same encounter, the elements of the crimes were not the same as each count contained an element not contained in the other. Attempted sexual battery did not contain the element of gratification of lust, while fondling did not require the element of penetration. Moore v. State, 112 So. 3d 1084 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions where the jury obviously found the victims' testimony and the other evidence supporting the pattern of sexual abuse more credible than defendant's defense, there was no injustice in allowing the jury's verdicts to stand. Faulkner v. State, 109 So. 3d 142 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Denial of defendant's motion for post-conviction relief on grounds that his guilty plea was not knowing and intelligent was proper as he was not prejudiced by his alleged lack of understanding of the proper sentencing range when he only received a 12-year sentence for each of three counts, to run concurrently, of touching a child for lustful purposes, when he could have received over 30 years. Pope v. State, 922 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 234 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court conducted a hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine whether the eight-year-old fondling victim was competent to testify as a witness and the victim testified that she knew the difference between a lie and the truth and that telling a lie was wrong. She also stated that she knew why she was in court, knew that she would be questioned by attorneys, remembered most of what had occurred, and would be able to say she did not remember if asked a question about a matter in which she had no recollection; as a result, the trial judge properly found that the victim was a competent witness. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 430 (Miss. 2005).

In a child fondling case, the State's objection to defendant's proffered instruction which explained that the victim's knowledge of sexual matters was acquired from persons or experiences other than defendant, on the basis that it was a comment on the weight of the evidence, was properly upheld by the trial court; defendant's proffered instruction, which set forth, in part, his contention that he did not have access to the child so as to have committed the offense, was also properly rejected, as access was not an element of the offense nor was it a defense. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 430 (Miss. 2005).

Trial judge mistakenly determined the crime of molestation under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 to be a lesser-included offense of sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95; molestation was recognized as a separate offense from sexual battery, as defendants were frequently charged with both crimes simultaneously; to allow defendant to be convicted of a crime for which he was never charged would have created an injustice, as the legislature felt it necessary to construct two separate and distinct statutes regarding sexual battery and molestation. Friley v. State, 856 So. 2d 654 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), reversed by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 998 (Miss. Aug. 5, 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction of fondling a child under the age of 16 when the victim testified that defendant had touched her "pee-pee," the victim was four years old at the time of the incident, and a physician testified that the child had an enlarged hymen. Voyles v. State, 822 So. 2d 333 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The court properly refused an instruction on simple assault as a lesser included offense because even if the jury found that defendant pinched the child victim between the legs, no evidence warranted finding defendant guilty of simple assault, which required an attempt to cause bodily injury. Goodnite v. State, 799 So. 2d 64 (Miss. 2001).

In order to support a conviction under this section, there must be some evidence to give rise to an inference that an undisputed act of touching was for the purpose of satisfying the defendant's depraved sexual desires. Bradford v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 1777 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The elements of fondling or unlawful touching are: (1) a handling or touching or rubbing with any part of the assailant's body or any member thereof, (2) of a child under the age of 14 years, (3) by a person above the age of 18 years, (4) for the purposes of gratifying the lust or indulging licentious sexual desires of the assailant. Brady v. State, 722 So. 2d 151 (Ct. App. 1998).

Fondling is not a lesser included offense of sexual battery. Brady v. State, 722 So. 2d 151 (Ct. App. 1998).

Prosecution for fondling under amendment to statute of limitations extending limitation period in effect at time of crime was not ex post facto violation; statute of limitations is procedural and does not come within recognized exception creating substantive right as fondling statute is separate from limitations period statute, defendant's acts were criminal at time of their commission, and defendant was not subjected to longer punishment by prosecution under lengthier limitations period. Christmas v. State, 700 So. 2d 262 (Miss. 1997), reh'g denied, 700 So. 2d 331 (Miss. 1997).

It is possible in some circumstances to commit forcible rape without committing child fondling, and thus child fondling under this section is not a necessarily included offense of forcible rape under § 97-3-65(2) as it read prior to amendment in 1985. Hailey v. State, 537 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 1988).

In absence of legislative standard for determining "crime of violence," a separate standard of determining violence applies when the victim is a child, and, thus, one of the 2 prior offenses of defendant, assault with attempt to commit sodomy, was a crime that was violent per se, and defendant was subject to sentencing as a habitual offender. Bandy v. State, 495 So. 2d 486 (Miss. 1986).

Imposition of a life sentence in prison without parole or probation imposed upon defendant who was convicted of child fondling, and who had 2 prior convictions—one for assault with intent to commit sodomy and the other for indecency with a child—did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Bandy v. State, 495 So. 2d 486 (Miss. 1986).

At trial of charge of child fondling, the court properly refused defendant's proposed jury instruction that testimony of child of tender years should be received with caution. Bandy v. State, 495 So. 2d 486 (Miss. 1986).

Forty-six year old male who engages in wholly consensual sexual intercourse with 13 year old female may not be convicted under child seduction statute (former § 97-5-21) where child has previously been intimate with at least 2 other men; nor may he be convicted under this section on basis of foreplay leading to intercourse. McBrayer v. State, 467 So. 2d 647 (Miss. 1985).

The decision invalidating the fondling statute would be given prospective effect only. Harrell v. State, 386 So. 2d 390 (Miss. 1980).

Defendant was improperly convicted under this section since it is applicable only to males and therefore violates equal protection. Carley v. State, 382 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. 1980).

A conviction for fondling would be reversed since this section is unconstitutional. Catchot v. State, 374 So. 2d 807 (Miss. 1979).

The fondling statute is void since it discriminates against males and denies them equal protection of the law. Tatro v. State, 372 So. 2d 283 (Miss. 1979).

A conviction under this section [Code 1942, § 2052] was set aside where attorney retained by defendant withdrew on the day of the trial and defendant, on being denied a continuance to the next term of court, was granted only a few minutes to find another attorney, and failed to do so. Mabry v. State, 245 Miss. 143, 149 So. 2d 25 (1963).

The phrase, "for the purpose of," was incorporated in this section [Code 1942, § 2052] in order to exclude from its coverage affectionate, lawful caresses of a child. Kendall v. State, 244 Miss. 618, 145 So. 2d 924 (1962).

Voluntary drunkenness is no defense to a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2052], where not of a degree as to render accused unable to understand what he was doing. Kendall v. State, 244 Miss. 618, 145 So. 2d 924 (1962).

The offense of indecent assault upon a female child is a statutory and not a common-law crime. Love v. State, 211 Miss. 606, 52 So. 2d 470 (1951).

The age of accused is an affirmative fact which must be charged and proved by the state. Love v. State, 211 Miss. 606, 52 So. 2d 470 (1951).

In prosecution for violation of the person of a female child under thirteen years of age, question of prosecuting attorney, in examining witness, containing suggestion that defendant might have been guilty of previous offenses with other children held improper but not to require reversal, where court sustained objections to testimony. Allen v. State, 175 Miss. 745, 166 So. 922 (1936).

2. Indictment.

Indictment charged defendant with one count of touching a child for lustful purposes pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1) and one count of sexual battery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and the crimes formed a common scheme of sexual misconduct and all the crimes occurred over a period of time against the same victim in a similar manner; thus, the court rejected defendant's claim that it was error for him to be tried on a multi-count indictment, for purposes of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-2, plus the court noted that the trial court instructed the jury to evaluate each count separately and return separate verdicts. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Indictment for fondling and sexual battery was not defective for failing to provide the specific dates that the offenses occurred, as the state had narrowed the time frame sufficiently to put defendant on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

In defendant's prosecution for fondling a child victim, his argument that the indictment failed to properly advise him of the date of the offense because it alleged that the offense occurred over more than a two-year period, and deprived him of a fair opportunity to prepare defense, was rejected; the indictment was amended at the conclusion of the State's case to narrow, to a three-month window, the time period, and the child was very specific as to the dates of the offense. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 430 (Miss. 2005).

A trial court did not err in allowing the State to amend an indictment charging the defendant with touching a child for a lustful purpose under this section by changing the dates on which the offenses occurred since the change was one of mere form rather than substance. Baine v. State, 604 So. 2d 258 (Miss. 1992).

An indictment which specified the principal charge against the defendant, a violation of this section, and went on to cite with specificity the other 2 previous convictions against him, without ever informing him that the state sought to sentence him as a habitual offender under § 99-19-83, was inadequate, but the inadequacy of the indictment did not require reversal where the defendant had notice of the habitual offender charge, because his attorney had gleaned from the indictment that defendant was charged under § 99-19-83. Bandy v. State, 495 So. 2d 486 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution for fondling a child, the failure of the original indictment to specifically charge that the defendant was a male person was a formal defect which was properly cured by granting the state's motion to amend. Peterson v. State, 357 So. 2d 113 (Miss. 1978).

An indictment that charged the defendant with indecent assault on a female child under the age of thirteen years, was insufficient because of the failure to charge that the defendant was a male person above the age of eighteen years. Love v. State, 211 Miss. 606, 52 So. 2d 470 (1951).

3. Evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of gratification of lust and the verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because defendant was 26 years old at the time of the December incident, and the victim was 14 years old; defendant forced the victim to touch his privates; and the victim's brother corroborated the victim's testimony that defendant forced her to touch defendant's privates. Sims v. State, 127 So. 3d 307 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the evidence was such that allowing the verdict to stand would not sanction an unconscionable justice; several witnesses, including the victim, testified to the elements of fondling, while defendant called no witnesses of his own and pointed to no evidence in the record that preponderated heavily against the verdict. Jenkins v. State, 131 So. 3d 544 (Miss. 2013), modified and rehearing denied by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 133 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2014).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict because the victim's testimony was sufficient to establish the elements of fondling beyond a reasonable doubt; the victim's therapist testified that the victim's conduct was consistent with one who was the victim of a sex crime, and the victim gave consistent statements to her stepmother, a deputy sheriff, and a nurse, who each testified to her description of the abuse. Jenkins v. State, 131 So. 3d 544 (Miss. 2013), modified and rehearing denied by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 133 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2014).

Jury's verdict finding defendant guilty of child fondling of his fourteen-year-old daughter was sufficiently supported by the evidence and not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because the victim testified that defendant had touched her vagina several times between June 2010 and September 2010 with his hands, mouth, penis, and a vibrator, and DNA evidence inside and outside the victim's vagina did not eliminate defendant as a potential source. Weeks v. State, 123 So. 3d 373 (Miss. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for touching a child for lustful purposes because an expert opined that the child's examination was consistent with a child who had suffered "an inappropriate act," and the child stated at trial that defendant had never gone more than a year without touching her inappropriately. Bateman v. State, 125 So. 3d 616 (Miss. 2013).

Victim's testimony that she believed defendant to be 42 years old at the time of the crime was sufficient to prove that defendant was over the age of 18. Campbell v. State, 125 So. 3d 46 (Miss. 2013).

Evidence that the victim believed that defendant was her foster father, she lived with defendant and his wife for several months, she had her own bedroom in defendant's residence, she went on family vacations with defendant and his wife, and defendant and his wife imposed rules on the victim was sufficient for the jury to conclude that defendant, while not the victim's foster parent, was in a position of trust or authority over the victim. Campbell v. State, 125 So. 3d 46 (Miss. 2013).

Victim's testimony that defendant put his penis in her hand, it was wet, and she wiped it on her mattress, and that defendant's semen was recovered from the mattress was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for touching a child for lustful purposes. Gerhold v. State, 127 So. 3d 1116 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 17 (Miss. 2014).

Defendant's conviction of fondling was affirmed, as the jury's acceptance of the complainant's testimony over defendant's testimony was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence so as to sanction an unconscionable injustice. Fortune v. State, 110 So. 3d 831 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Fact that the jury did not find defendant guilty of sexual battery did not vitiate the evidence as to touching; it simply meant that the jury was discerning and did not find sufficient evidence to support the sexual battery charges. Dubose v. State, 22 So. 3d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Sexual penetration is not required to prove an unlawful touching. Dubose v. State, 22 So. 3d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence; all three children testified in graphic detail that defendant touched them. The children were removed from the home, and they were later taken to a pediatrician who testified that all three children had injuries consistent with their account of sexual abuse. Dubose v. State, 22 So. 3d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction of sexual battery and child fondling was supported by sufficient evidence where the victim, defendant's stepdaughter, testified that defendant fondled her breasts and genitals, inserted a vibrator into her vagina, and attempted vaginal penetration with his penis when she was between the ages of nine and ten years old. Further, the victim's grandmother testified that the victim admitted that defendant was "touching her" and that she took the victim to a doctor specializing in gynecology for a physical, and the doctor testified that her examination of the victim revealed tears in her hymen, which were consistent with and evidence of trauma. Tate v. State, 20 So. 3d 623 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant was properly convicted of sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(d)(1) and unlawful touching of a child under the age of sixteen in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because his rights under the Double Jeopardy Clause were not violated when the record clearly evinced two separate acts of touching, and the State presented separate and independent proof of each charge; defendant sexually assaulted the victim in her living room when he committed statutory rape and sexually assaulted her again when he committed sexual battery by inserting his finger into her anus, and evidence was presented by numerous witnesses that the victim consistently described a second act of touching at a different time and in a different location of the house. Woods v. State, 30 So. 3d 362 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Court found a factual basis to establish the charges against an inmate for voyeurism under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-29-61 and touching a child for lustful purposes under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1), given that (1) the inmate admitted the facts that surrounded the elements for both of the crimes, (2) the inmate's daughter reported the same story to her grandmother and others, and (3) the daughter provided sufficient facts and detail to support the charges. Gaddy v. State, 21 So. 3d 677 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 559 U.S. 1078, 130 S. Ct. 2115, 176 L. Ed. 2d 741, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 3422, 78 U.S.L.W. 3611 (2010).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of fondling, although defendant argued that if he touched the victim at all on the breasts, the touching was accidental; the circumstances of the case were sufficient for a reasonable jury to infer that defendant's intent in touching the victim was to satisfy his lustful desires. Wright v. State, 9 So. 3d 447 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

There was no factual basis for defendant's guilty plea to touching a child for lustful purposes; while defendant admitted to positioning a blanket that was covering the child and taking pictures of the child's clothed buttocks while the child slept, defendant only touched the blanket. Carreiro v. State, 5 So. 3d 1170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he was convicted of statutory rape and unlawful touching of a child for lustful purposes, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-3-65(1)(b) and 97-5-23(1), was appropriate because defendant's argument on appeal raised the same points that were part of his trial defense. Defendant also failed to point to anything in the record negating the State's evidence. Parramore v. State, 5 So. 3d 1074 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the evidence supported defendant's convictions for touching a child for lustful purposes, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1), and kidnapping; the victim testified as to what transpired and identified both defendant and defendant's vehicle. Nix v. State, 8 So. 3d 141 (Miss. 2009).

Where the fourteen-year-old victim testified that she was visiting her grandparent's house when defendant inappropriately touched her, the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict convicting defendant of lustful touching of a child pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23; the victim never returned to her grandparent's home after the alleged incident occurred. While the victim delayed three weeks in reporting the alleged incident, her actions were consistent with the conduct of a person victimized by a sex crime; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Massey v. State, 992 So. 2d 1161 (Miss. 2008).

Jury was faced with the victim's account of the crime versus defendant's denial and weighing the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict, the court could not find that allowing defendant's conviction under Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-5-23(1), 97-3-95(1)(d) to stand would sanction an unconscionable injustice. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

There was testimony from the victim that defendant had an erection during one of the encounters and thus a rational juror could have found that defendant's actions were lustful, for purposes of his fondling conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1). Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of fondling, notwithstanding the defendant's contention that there was no physical evidence, because the victim testified that she was fondled by the defendant and a witness testified that she saw the defendant fondling the victim. Miller v. State, 982 So. 2d 995 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for fondling was appropriate based on the victim's testimony that defendant touched or poked her "private area" and based on a detective's testimony that defendant made several incriminating statements during an interview with the detective. In part, the detective testified that defendant acknowledged that he was just trying to see if he could get away with touching the victim. Richardson v. State, 990 So. 2d 247 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for fondling his seven-year-old daughter was appropriate, in part because the jury heard the child's testimony that defendant performed a sexual act on her while she was playing on the computer. Any inconsistencies or contradictions in her testimony were obviously resolved by the jury in favor of the state. Golden v. State, 984 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

While defendant was spending the evening at the house, the eleven-year-old victim testified that someone came into her bedroom and rubbed her breasts and buttocks and rubbed his penis against her legs, with his legs wrapped around her; the victim's sister testified that she saw defendant in the bedroom. The evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for gratification of lust with a child under the age of sixteen in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1). Boone v. State, 973 So. 2d 237 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for fondling a child under the age of 18 was appropriate because the evidence was sufficient. The jury had before it defendant's confession and the victim's testimony regarding the events and the fondling. Pool v. Pool, 989 So. 2d 920 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 993 So. 2d 832, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 383 (Miss. 2008).

State adequately proved that defendant intended to gratify his lust when he molested the victim because the evidence indicated that defendant put his hand down the victim's shirt and touched her bare breast, and the victim testified that she tried to get away from defendant but that he restrained her. Under such circumstances, the jury was permitted to draw a reasonable inference that defendant had an improper purpose in mind; touching of this fashion went beyond innocent "prankish" touching or affectionate behavior. Foxworth v. State, 982 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 241 (Miss. 2008).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for two counts of gratification of lust, a violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(2), because the victim, defendant's daughter, testified that defendant inserted his finger into her vagina and rubbed his hands under both her swimsuit top and bottom, while witnesses at the scene saw defendant place his hands under the victim's swimsuit and rub her in inappropriate places, and the intent to gratify his lust could easily be inferred from defendant's actions. McDonald v. State, 976 So. 2d 942 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 96 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 846, 129 S. Ct. 90, 172 L. Ed. 2d 77, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7290, 77 U.S.L.W. 3199 (2008).

Trial court did not err by not allowing defendant to introduce evidence concerning the circumstances of his divorce and custody battle with his daughter's mother because he produced no evidence, other than his assertions, that his ex-wife was involved in the actions leading up to defendant's conviction for molesting his daughter under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(2); the ex-wife was not a witness to the incident nor was she involved in bringing charges against defendant, and a close mother-daughter relationship was not sufficient evidence to show that either the ex-wife instructed her daughter to inform the authorities of the molestation or that the daughter fabricated the charge on her own. McDonald v. State, 976 So. 2d 942 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 96 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 846, 129 S. Ct. 90, 172 L. Ed. 2d 77, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7290, 77 U.S.L.W. 3199 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of fondling of a child where there was ample evidence to support the jury's verdict; the jury heard the victim's testimony in which she described the various inappropriate ways defendant touched her, and the jury also heard defendant's recorded phone conversations with the victim. Williams v. State, 970 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

At trial for fondling and sexual battery, it was not error under the circumstances presented to accept a witness as an expert in the field of child abuse, allow an unredacted videotape of the child victim's interview to be admitted into evidence, or to allow the victim's mother to testify as to statements that the victim made to her. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

Although defendant alleged that he was not allowed to demonstrate bias or prejudice, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the mother's motive of money was a collateral matter that would not help the jury decide whether the statutory rape or fondling occurred; thus, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 103(a), the trial court did not err in excluding that evidence. Poynor v. State, 962 So. 2d 68 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2007).

Directed verdict was properly denied for a conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-

5-23(1) because a child testified that defendant rubbed his bare behind in a vehicle, and despite the fact that no baby oil was found on his body, the child testified that defendant had masturbated with the baby oil; it did not matter that the victim did not inform people of the incident when defendant made several stops. Potts v. State, 955 So. 2d 913 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict because there was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of both sexual battery and fondling; the victim testified that, inter alia: (1) defendant licked her everywhere, including between her legs and her chest; (2) defendant penetrated the victim's vagina with his tongue; (3) defendant pulled off the victim's panties in order to fondle and lick her; (4) defendant pulled up her shirt to lick her chest; (5) defendant tried to insert his thumb inside the victim; (6) and the victim was 13 years old at the time, and defendant was her stepfather. Ivy v. State, 949 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the evidence weighed in the light most favorable to the verdict supported the jury's resolution of the conflicting testimony; the evidence presented in defendant's trial for sexual battery and fondling included: (1) the victim's testimony in graphic detail as to the licking and touching that she endured from defendant; (2) defendant exercised his right to testify and testified that he did nothing wrong to the victim, his stepdaughter, but that the victim just wanted him out of the house; and (3) an investigator testified regarding what defendant stated in his written statement as well as statements defendant made that he did not want in the written statement. Ivy v. State, 949 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2007).

Where a doctor who examined the victim testified that the victim's rectum was swollen and there was a tear on the opening into the rectum, and he stated that those injuries were consistent with sexual battery, the evidence clearly indicated that the victim was sexually penetrated pursuant to the sexual battery statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d); with regard to the statement by the victim's grandmother that the victim had told lies before, the evidence did not rise to the level of conflicting evidence warranting a lustful touching jury instruction, and thus the trial court did not err in denying the jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of lustful touching. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for fondling a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because, inter alia: (1) the evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, (2) the trial court did not improperly limit cross-examination of the victim in violation of defendant's rights under USCS Const. Amend. 6 and Miss. Const. Art. III, § 26, because testimony concerning the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412; (3) since defendant failed to object at trial to the qualification of an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the issue was waived; and (4) under Miss. R. Evid. 615(3), the expert witness was properly allowed to remain in the court room so that she could base her opinion on facts learned at the trial pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Aguilar v. State, 955 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of fondling the 15-year-old victim under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because: (1) the state offered direct evidence in the form of the victim's testimony and defendant's statement to the police; and (2) recognition that defendant touched the victim to satisfy his lustful desires could arise from the circumstances of the encounter. Mingo v. State, 944 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 2006).

Insured, an agent, and two owners were not entitled to coverage under a commercial general liability policy with regard to lawsuits filed against them, which alleged that the insured, the agent, and the owners acted negligently by allowing an officer to sexually molest certain females, as the policy contained an exclusion for injuries that arose out of a willful violation of a penal statute, and the officer's alleged sexual misconduct violated Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23. Md. Cas. Co. v. Lab Disc.

Drug, Inc., 468 F. Supp. 2d 862 (S.D. Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for two counts of child fondling, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(2), was supported by substantial evidence where defendant's 13- and 14-year-old daughters testified that he rubbed his penis on their thighs; one daughter also testified that defendant eventually ejaculated on her. Boykin v. State, 941 So. 2d 892 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for fondling was appropriate because the fact that the victim's father was in prison for child molestation was not relevant evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 401 since the evidence regarding the victim's father did not affect the credibility of the victim and she had not seen her father in over four years; thus, the father was not responsible for committing the crime, contrary to defendant's suggestion. Higdon v. State, 938 So. 2d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Eleven-year-old victim testified that defendant propositioned her to play a deviant game of hide-and-seek and began touching her on the thigh; that conduct clearly constituted touching and handling a child for lustful purposes under the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23. Also, the corroborated testimony of the victim provided a sound basis for the jury's determination of guilt; thus, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of touching and handling a child for lustful purposes. Smith v. State, 925 So. 2d 825 (Miss. 2006).

Where defendant appealed his conviction of three counts of fondling child victims, asserting that the testimony of the State's expert forensic interviewer should not have been allowed because the forensic interviewer could not cite evidence that her methods had ever been independently tested, nor could she shed any light on the rate of error regarding her interviewing methods, and the expert's methods were unreliable, as there was no single accrediting or sanctioning body for the field of forensic interviewing, and the State properly countered that (1) the area of investigations of sexual abuse cases, especially through interviews, was a competent area of expertise, (2) the expert's testimony was based upon sufficient facts and data, as she testified in detail how she conducted her interview with the victim and what the victim told her; (3) the testimony was the product of reliable principles and methods, despite the general consensus within the field that there was no single “right way” to conduct an interview; and (4) the expert applied the principles and methods of her interviewing skills reliably to the facts of the case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the expert testimony. Mooneyham v. State, 915 So. 2d 1102 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to have convicted defendant of touching a child for lustful purposes, where: (1) defendant was forty-six years old when the incident occurred; (2) the victim, who was twelve years old when the incident occurred, gave compelling testimony and other witnesses for the State testified that the mother screamed and yelled at defendant as he was lying on the floor next to the mattress where the victim slept that night; and (3) the jury chose to believe the testimony of the victim as to what happened and could have reasonably inferred that defendant’s actions were prompted by the need to gratify his lust or indulge his depraved sexual desires. Weathersby v. State, 919 So. 2d 1146 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant was convicted of touching a child for lustful purposes, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying his motion for a new trial because although there were two versions of what happened, it was the function of the jury to pass upon the credibility of the evidence, and the jury obviously found the State’s version more credible; from the evidence presented at trial, reasonable jurors could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of touching a child for lustful purposes. Weathersby v. State, 919 So. 2d 1146 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of two counts of touching a child for lustful purposes where, even though the minor victims’ testimony slightly differed regarding the events of the sexual abuse, the word of the victim of a sex crime, even if unsupported, was sufficient to support a guilty verdict when that testimony had not been discredited or contradicted by credible evidence; based on the evidence presented, the jury decided which testimony to accept and which to reject and returned a reasonable verdict. Bradley v. State, 921 So. 2d 385 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

From the colloquies set forth in the record, the child psychologist did not offer a direct opinion that the child fondling victim was telling the truth. However, whether his testimony ran afoul of the prohibition against syndrome testimony was a closer question; while the psychologist did not specifically testify that the victim displayed the “so-called typical characteristics” of child-victims of sexual abuse, he came very close, but there was no reversible error because defendant never objected to the testimony on the basis that he urged on appeal. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 430 (Miss. 2005).

Court of appeals erred when it reversed defendant’s conviction for molestation where molestation was a lesser included offense of sexual battery; defendant’s actions were done with the purpose of gratifying his lust, and the victim was under the age of 14 at the time of the incident, and defendant’s acts of grabbing the victim, touching her genital area, and touching himself, demonstrated that he was gratifying his lust, and intent could be inferred from a defendant’s actions. Friley v. State, 879 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant’s conviction was affirmed; the 13-year-old victim’s testimony that defendant massaged her nipple the entire time they were riding a three-wheeler together was sufficient to prove defendant touched for the purpose of satisfying his lustful desires. Ladnier v. State, 878 So. 2d 926 (Miss. 2004).

Jury’s verdict that defendant was guilty of gratification of lust was not against the weight of the evidence, where the evidence showed that defendant surreptitiously entered the bedroom where children were sleeping, and touched the body of one of the girls; when he was observed, he ran from the room; and he later returned and grabbed the legs of the child, tried to pull her from the bed, then again ran from the room after being observed by others. Jordan v. State, 868 So. 2d 1065 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where nine-year-old victim testified that defendant kissed the victim on her lips, touched the victim's breasts, asked the victim if it felt good, and told her not to tell anyone, while defendant asserted the touching was not sexually motivated, credibility was a jury issue, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for unlawful touching of a child for lustful purposes, and defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied. Smith v. State, 867 So. 2d 276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Discrepancies in a child's prior statements regarding sexual abuse by defendant, a male relative, were not so damaging to the child's credibility as to have compelled the conclusion that the jury had abused its discretion in finding that she had truthfully related the events of the two encounters with defendant that led to the charges; the examining doctor testified, based on her professional experience, that it was not uncommon for a child sexual abuse victim to give different versions of events when talking to different people because, among other considerations, a child in that situation was often inclined to conceal or even deny matters if the child was made uncomfortable or fearful of the person making inquiry. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

There certainly was evidence to support conviction of one count of touching a child for lustful purposes, a violation of former Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1), where, during the child's testimony, she stated that defendant had touched her all over her body with his hands. Peters v. State, 864 So. 2d 983 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Each of the minor victims testified to being fondled by defendant and the testimony of the minor victims was corroborated and given credence by defendant's statements to the police that defendant had homosexual tendencies and defendant's admissions to touching the genital area of each of the minor victims; thus, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions for fondling, and a new trial was not warranted. Poe v. State, 872 So. 2d 686 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 873 So. 2d 1032, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 519 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of touching of a child for lustful purposes where the unsupported word of the victim was sufficient to support a guilty verdict where the testimony was not discredited or contradicted by other credible evidence, especially if the conduct of the victim was consistent with the conduct of one who had been victimized by a sex crime; the victim's testimony was not discredited or contradicted. Byars v. State, 835 So. 2d 965 (Miss. Ct. App. January 28, 2003).

Evidence was sufficient where the 10-year-old victim gave a statement to the police, alleging that defendant had committed sexual acts on her; the child was not presumed to be dishonest; and the McClain standard was not met and reversal was thus not required. Parker v. State, 825 So. 2d 59 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant fondled a child where the victim, her sister, and a school counselor who the victim spoke to shortly after the incident all testified that the defendant approached the victim from behind while unclothed, rubbed her breasts with his hands, and rubbed his penis on her buttocks. Peet v. State, 811 So. 2d 380 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where (1) the defendant was over 18 years old and the victim was 14 years old at the time of the incident at issue, (2) the victim testified that she awakened to find the defendant on top of her and that he "put his private part inside of [her] and started moving around," and (3) a nurse testified that her physical examination of the victim revealed that there were no signs of sexual penetration, but that there were numerous signs of external contact that could be related to sexual molestation. Jones v. State, 783 So. 2d 771 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where the victim testified that the defendant fondled her breasts and genitalia and that she suffered from Huntington's disease, notwithstanding defendant's assertion that he merely tried to help her get up from where she had fallen on the floor; thus, the defendant was not entitled to judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial. Sherrod v. State, 755 So. 2d 569 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was insufficient to support a conviction under this section where (1) the only evidence of the defendant's activities consisted of testimony that, in a car crowded with children, he was engaged in a game involving contact of only the briefest duration consisting of a pinch that was followed by a laughing attempt to place the blame for the contact on one of the other children, (2) there was no evidence of any attempt to grope or rub either of the children in a sexually suggestive manner, and (3) there was no evidence that the defendant was unnaturally aroused or sexually excited by this seemingly prankish behavior. Bradford v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 1777 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for touching a child for a lustful purpose under this section, arising from the defendant's sexual molestation of a child who attended his wife's daycare center, evidence of other crimes concerning other children was admissible since the defendant's conduct toward other children at the daycare center was integrally related in time, place and fact to his conduct toward the victim. Baine v. State, 604 So. 2d 258 (Miss. 1992).

In a prosecution for child fondling, testimony that the defendant had exposed himself to children other than the victim was not admissible to show the defendant's custom of criminal action and lustful disposition toward children in general; evidence of other sexual relations is limited to those between the defendant and the particular victim to show the lustful, lascivious disposition of the defendant toward that victim. Mitchell v. State, 539 So. 2d 1366 (Miss. 1989).

In proving gratification of lust pursuant to this section, which prohibits a person over the age of 18 from having contact with a child under the age of 14 for lustful purposes, the state bears the burden of proving that the person so charged was above 18 years of age. Crenshaw v. State, 520 So. 2d 131 (Miss. 1988).

Defendant's intent to commit crime of gratification of lust can be determined from acts of accused and his conduct and inferences of guilt may be fairly deducible from all circumstances, where testimony showed that on numerous occasions over course of one to 2 years, defendant had rubbed vaginal area of 9-year-old female. Shive v. State, 507 So. 2d 898 (Miss. 1987).

At trial of child fondling charge, the age of the child-victim was properly proved by testimony of the victim and of her mother, while the defendant's age was in his admission to arresting officers. Bandy v. State, 495 So. 2d 486 (Miss. 1986).

There was ample evidence for the jury to find that defendant was guilty of the crime of fondling a child, given the admission of defendant's statement and the testimony of the prosecuting witness. Harrell v. State, 357 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 1978).

In a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2052] testimony of the outraged female does not require corroboration. Pittman v. State, 236 Miss. 592, 111 So. 2d 415 (1959).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for violation of the person of a female child under 13 years of age. Mad-dox v. State, 230 Miss. 529, 93 So. 2d 649 (1957).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for violation of the person of a female child under thirteen years of age. Allen v. State, 175 Miss. 745, 166 So. 922 (1936).

4. Sentence.

Appellant's sentences for the sexual exploitation of a minor in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(6) and fondling in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(2) were within the limits prescribed by the statutes; appellant faced up to eighty-five years in prison, and the circuit court sentenced him to the maximum sentence on all charges but required the sentences to run concurrently, effectively reducing appellant's sentence by forty-five years. Argol v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 143 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 2, 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 59 (Miss. 2014), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 60 (Miss. 2014).

Defendant's sentence was not illegal because, for the fondling count, defendant was sentenced to twelve years, with three years post-release supervision, which, when combined, was for fifteen years and was within the statutory limits. Moore v. State, 112 So. 3d 1084 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's motion for postconviction relief was properly dismissed because it was untimely under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5(2) and defendant's sentence was not illegal since it was undeniably less than the 15-year maximum sentence for touching a child for lustful purposes under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1). Desemar v. State, 99 So. 3d 279 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 16, 2012).

Terms of an inmate's sentences were within the statutory limits of Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-29-61, 97-5-23(1) and thus the claim that the trial court erred in sentencing the inmate to maximum sentences was without merit. Gaddy v. State, 21 So. 3d 677 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 559 U.S. 1078, 130 S. Ct. 2115, 176 L. Ed. 2d 741, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 3422, 78 U.S.L.W. 3611 (2010).

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, motion for postconviction relief was appropriate because his sentence was within the prescribed limits of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 and it did not exceed the maximum term allowed by statute. Bowling v. State, 12 So. 3d 607 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Denial of defendant's motion for postconviction relief on grounds that his guilty plea was not voluntary was proper as he was not prejudiced by his lack of understanding of the proper sentencing range; he only received a 12-year sentence for each of three counts, to run concurrently, of touching a child for lustful purposes, when he could have received over 30 years. Pope v. State, 922 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 234 (Miss. 2006).

In a case where defendant was convicted of three counts of fondling the 15-year-old victim under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23, defendant's three 10-year consecutive sentences under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-21 were not disproportionate to defendant's crimes, were within the limits set by statute, and did not violate the Eighth Amendment. Mingo v. State, 944 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 2006).

Where defendant was sentenced to five years of incarceration, a 10 year suspended sentence, and five years post-release supervision, defendant's sentence was well within the statutory maximum of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because a defendant's period of supervised release was not counted toward the defendant's time served. Hobson v. State, 910 So. 2d 1139 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

The retroactive application of an amendment to the statute pertaining to sentencing was an ex post facto violation where it resulted in a longer sentence than that allowed under the version of the statute that existed at the time of the crime. McGowan v. State, 742 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

5. Defense.

The defense of mistake of age is not available to a person accused of fondling a child under the age of 14. Todd v. State, 806 So. 2d 1086 (Miss. 2001).

6. Ineffective assistance of counsel.

Denial of post-conviction relief was proper as the sentence imposed was within the statutory mandate, the petitioner failed to claim his guilty plea to touching a child for lustful purposes under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(1) was not freely, voluntarily, and intelligently given, and he did not request a reversal of his guilty plea due to his trial counsel's alleged ineffective assistance. Lewis v. State, 988 So. 2d 942 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where there was nothing in the record before the appellate court that would have permitted a meaningful analysis of what uncalled witnesses might have testified to or whether there might have been compelling reasons not to call them even if they were prepared to offer the testimony defendant in his brief contended they would, defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim could only be raised by means of a motion for postconviction relief. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

7. Lesser nonincluded offenses.

Where defendant was indicted for sexual battery, it was not plain error for the trial court to convict defendant of the crime of touching and handling a child for lustful purposes; unlawful touching was not a lesser-included offense of sexual battery, however, unlike in Friley v. State; not only did defendant not object to the lesser offense instruction, defendant offered an instruction on the form of verdict that asked the jury to determine whether defendant was guilty of the lesser crime of touching and handling a child for lustful purposes. Dupuis v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 1268 (Miss. Ct. App. June 24, 2003).

8. Jury instructions.

Trial court did not err by giving a lesser-included-offense jury instruction regarding fondling under the count charging defendant with sexual battery because ample evidence supported the lesser-included offense of fondling, and the intent element of fondling could be inferred from defendant's actions. Jenkins v. State, 131 So. 3d 544 (Miss. 2013), modified and rehearing denied by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 133 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2014).

Where defendant claimed his medication rendered him unconscious of his alleged fondling of a child, the trial court did not err in refusing his instruction on "legal unconsciousness due to involuntary intoxication," as it charged the jury on the requisite mens rea and gave defendant the opportunity to present his defense that any inappropriate act was due to effects of the medication. Fortune v. State, 110 So. 3d 831 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Where a child testified that defendant sodomized him while they were in a chicken house in Lena, Mississippi, which the boy believed was in Scott County, as Lena was in fact in Leake County, and the jury was never instructed that it had to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime had occurred in Scott County—an essential element of the offense—defendant's conviction of fondling the child was reversed. Rogers v. State, 95 So. 3d 623 (Miss. Aug. 16, 2012).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for fondling a child under the age of 16, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23, he argued unsuccessfully that he was denied a fair trial because jury instruction number five impermissibly shifted the burden of proof from the State to him, thereby requiring him to prove his innocence. Jury instruction number five did not impermissibly shift the burden of proof to defendant, and when that instruction was considered in combination with instructions seven and eight, his presumption of innocence and the State's burden of proof were fairly and accurately announced and any potential for juror confusion was removed. Johnson v. State, 19 So. 3d 145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

§ 97-5-24. Sexual involvement of school employee with student; duty to report; penalties for failure to report; immunity from civil liability for report made in good faith.

If any person eighteen (18) years or older who is employed by any public school district or private school in this state is accused of fondling or having any type of sexual involvement with any child under the age of eighteen (18) years who is enrolled in such school, the principal of such school and the superintendent of such school district shall timely notify the district attorney with jurisdiction where the school is located of such accusation, the Mississippi Department of Education and the Department of Human Services, provided that such accusation is reported to the principal and to the school superintendent and that there is a reasonable basis to believe that such accusation is true. Any superintendent, or his designee, who fails to make a report required by this section shall be subject to the penalties provided in Section 37-11-35. Any superintendent, principal, teacher or other school personnel participating in the making of a required report pursuant to this section or participating in any judicial proceeding resulting therefrom shall be presumed to be acting in good faith. Any person reporting in good faith shall be immune from any civil liability that might otherwise be incurred or imposed.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Duty not triggered.
2. Applicable standard.

1. Duty not triggered.

Judgment was properly entered for a school district in a case alleging negligence per se and other causes of action because an unsubstantiated rumor of an inappropriate relationship between a teacher and a student, without more, was insufficient to trigger a reporting duty under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-24; Miss. Code Ann. § 43-21-353 did not apply since the teacher was not a person responsible for the student's care or support, and there was no evidence that the type of conduct applicable to § 43-21-353 had occurred. Brown v. Pontotoc County Sch. Dist. (In re Doe), 957 So. 2d 410 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

2. Applicable standard.

Standard enunciated in T.M. v. Noblitt, 650 So. 2d 1340 (Miss. 1995), was applied to a case where a school district did not report a relationship between a teacher and a student; under the “personal judgment and discretion” standard, a trial court did not err in determining that the district did not know of the relationship between them based on one unsubstantiated rumor. Brown v. Pontotoc County Sch. Dist. (In re Doe), 957 So. 2d 410 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

§ 97-5-27. Dissemination of sexually oriented material to persons under eighteen years of age; use of computer for purpose of luring or inducing persons under eighteen years of age to engage in sexual contact.

(1) Any person who intentionally and knowingly disseminates sexually oriented material to any person under eighteen (18) years of age shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined for each offense not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) nor more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) or be imprisoned for not more than one (1) year in the county jail, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment. A person disseminates sexually oriented material within the meaning of this section if he:

(a) Sells, delivers or provides, or offers or agrees to sell, deliver or provide, any sexually oriented writing, picture, record or other representation or embodiment that is sexually oriented; or

(b) Presents or directs a sexually oriented play, dance or other performance or participates directly in that portion thereof which makes it sexually oriented; or

(c) Exhibits, presents, rents, sells, delivers or provides, or offers or agrees to exhibit, present, rent or to provide any sexually oriented still or motion picture, film, filmstrip or projection slide, or sound recording, sound tape or sound track or any matter or material of whatever form which is a representation, embodiment, performance or publication that is sexually oriented.

(2) For purposes of this section, any material is sexually oriented if the material contains representations or descriptions, actual or simulated, of masturbation, sodomy, excretory functions, lewd exhibition of the genitals or female breasts, sadomasochistic abuse (for the purpose of sexual stimulation or gratification), homosexuality, lesbianism, bestiality, sexual intercourse, or physical contact with a person's clothed or unclothed genitals, pubic area, buttocks, or the breast or breasts of a female for the purpose of sexual stimulation, gratification or perversion.

(3)(a) A person is guilty of computer luring when:

(i) Knowing the character and content of any communication of sexually oriented material, he intentionally uses any computer communication system allowing the input, output, examination or transfer of computer data or computer programs from one (1) computer to another, to initiate or engage in such communication with a person under the age of eighteen (18); and

(ii) By means of such communication he importunes, invites or induces a person under the age of eighteen (18) years to engage in sexual intercourse, deviant sexual intercourse or sexual contact with him, or to engage in a sexual performance, obscene sexual performance or sexual conduct for his benefit.

(b) A person who engages in the conduct proscribed by this subsection (3) is presumed to do so with knowledge of the character and content of the material.

(c) In any prosecution for computer luring, it shall be a defense that:

(i) The defendant made a reasonable effort to ascertain the true age of the minor and was unable to do so as a result of actions taken by the minor; or

(ii) The defendant has taken, in good faith, reasonable, effective and appropriate actions under the circumstances to restrict or prevent access by minors to the materials prohibited, which may involve any appropriate measures to restrict minors from access to such communications, including any method which is feasible under available technology; or

(iii) The defendant has restricted access to such materials by requiring use of a verified credit card, debit account, adult access code or adult personal identification number; or

(iv) The defendant has in good faith established a mechanism such that the labeling, segregation or other mechanism enables such material to be automatically blocked or screened by software or other capabilities reasonably available to responsible adults wishing to effect such blocking or screening and the defendant has not otherwise solicited minors not subject to such screening or blocking capabilities to access that material or to circumvent any such screening or blocking.

(d) In any prosecution for computer luring:

(i) No person shall be held to have violated this subsection (3) solely for providing access or connection to or from a facility, system, or network not under that person's control, including transmission, downloading, intermediate storage, access software or other related capabilities that are incidental to providing such access or connection that do not include the creation of the content of the communication.

(ii) No employer shall be held liable for the actions of an employee or agent unless the employee's or agent's conduct is within the scope of his employment or agency or the employer, having knowledge of such conduct, authorizes or ratifies such conduct, or recklessly disregards such conduct.

(iii) The limitations provided by this paragraph (d) shall not be applicable to a person who is a conspirator with an entity actively involved in the creation or knowing distribution of communications that violate such provisions, or who knowingly advertises the availability of such communications, nor to a person who provides access or connection to a facility, system or network engaged in the violation of such provisions that is owned or controlled by such person.

(e) Computer luring is a felony, and any person convicted thereof shall be punished by commitment to the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed three (3) years and by a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00).

(4) Investigation and prosecution of a defendant under this section does not preclude prosecution of the defendant for a violation of other applicable criminal laws, including, but not limited to, the Mississippi Human Trafficking Act, Section 97-3-54 et seq.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence.

2. “Sexually explicit conduct.”

1. Evidence.

Jury was justified in its finding that the images it viewed depicted “sexually explicit conduct” because one tape showed numerous close-ups of only the genitals of young boys, which was the only focal point; another tape also showed children’s genitals in almost every depiction and from numerous angles. Hood v. State, 17 So. 3d 548 (Miss. 2009).

2. "Sexually explicit conduct."

On review of defendant's conviction of the exploitation of children based upon his possession of a videotape depicting nude male children and showing closeups of their genitals, the court rejected defendant's argument that his conviction could not stand because the children were not engaged in sexually explicit conduct and held that the jury properly concluded that the children were engaged in sexually explicit behavior because the depictions were designed to elicit a sexual response in the viewer. Hood v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 364 (Miss. July 30, 2009).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Testimony.
3. Evidence.
4. Cross examination.
5. Mens rea.
6. Closing arguments.
7. Jury instructions.
8. Sentence.

1. In general.

No plain error existed as to defendant’s arguments concerning jury instructions where the jury was instructed on all of the essential elements of the crime of child exploitation by three jury instructions tracking the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(2); although one instruction was erroneously given, no injustice occurred as the jury instructions, when read as a whole, fairly announced the law of the case and did not create an injustice. Blackwell v. State, 915 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 777 (Miss. 2005).

Producers of child pornography may be convicted under Federal Protection of Children Against Sexual Exploitation Act of 1977, which prohibits interstate transportation, shipment, distribution, receipt, or reproduction of visual depictions of minors engaged in sexually explicit conduct, without proof that producers had actual knowledge of fact that performer was a minor. United States v. X-Citement Video, Inc., 513 U.S. 64, 115 S. Ct. 464, 130 L. Ed. 2d 372 (1994), on remand, 77 F.3d 491 (9th Cir. 1996).

State was permitted under First Amendment to ban possession and viewing of child pornography because state did not rely on paternalistic interest in regulating person's mind but sought to serve compelling state interest in protecting victims of child pornography, and it was reasonable for state to conclude that such proscriptions were necessary to decrease production of child pornography; statute as construed by state Supreme Court to include elements of scienter and lewd exhibition was not constitutionally overboard, and state Supreme Court properly applied its narrowed construction of statute to accused's conduct; but it was necessary to remand case for new trial to insure that conviction stemmed from finding that prosecution had proved each of elements of offense. Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 110 S. Ct. 1691, 109 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1990), reh'g denied, 496 U.S. 913, 110 S. Ct. 2605, 110 L. Ed. 2d 285 (1990), on remand, 52 Ohio St. 3d 705, 557 N.E.2d 1210 (1990).

2. Testimony.

Defendant's argument that since the victim was the actual procurer of the obscene photographs, his conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(2) was improper, and was procedurally barred, Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6), because defendant's only source of authority was an opinion supporting nothing other than the assertion that he was convicted under an anti-pornography law. Minor v. State, 904 So. 2d 1164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

3. Evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(6) because the child victim identified defendant and testified that defendant approached him and asked to perform a sexual act upon him, and the mother's testimony of the events related to her by the child and their subsequent actions was properly admitted as non-hearsay or as a hearsay exception under Miss. R.

Evid. 803(1). Dunn v. State, 111 So. 3d 114 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for enticement of a child for sexual purposes, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(6), even though an overt request for sexual activity was not made in defendant's letter to the victim, because a jury could find that a request by a middle aged man to "visit" with an underage boy in a hotel room, against his parents' wishes, satisfactorily met the elements of the crime charged. Westbrook v. State, 109 So. 3d 609 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's child-exploitation conviction, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(6), because the jury could have reasonably inferred that defendant was trying to entice or solicit a minor child to meet defendant to engage in sexually explicit activity in that, at trial, defendant admitted to sending a series of late-night text messages to the minor child of defendant's paramour expressing defendant's sexual attraction to the child and that defendant wanted to touch the child's behind. Defendant was inside the young child's residence, just down the hall from the child's bedroom, when defendant sent these messages. Harris v. State, 107 So. 3d 1075 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's conviction for the possession of child pornography in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(5) was appropriate because there was no evidence that any of the computer viruses or other programs that defendant's computer expert described as being on defendant's computer actually transferred any of the images of child pornography. Further, that expert's testimony was in stark contrast to other testimony stating that viruses or "Trojan" programs were not responsible for placing the pornographic images of children onto defendant's computer. Renfrow v. State, 34 So. 3d 617 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 31 So. 3d 1217, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 213 (Miss. 2010).

On review of defendant's conviction of the exploitation of children based upon his possession of a videotape depicting nude male children and showing closeups of their genitals, the court rejected defendant's argument that his conviction could not stand because the children were not engaged in sexually explicit conduct and held that the jury properly concluded that the children were engaged in sexually explicit behavior because the depictions were designed to elicit a sexual response in the viewer. Hood v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 364 (Miss. July 30, 2009).

Where defendant testified that he received images of child pornography via an email, admitted that he created a folder in his computer, and placed fourteen images in that folder, there was direct evidence that he possessed child pornography; he was not entitled to a jury instruction on circumstantial evidence. The evidence was sufficient to support his conviction for fourteen counts of the exploitation of children in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(5). Argo v. State, 13 So. 3d 849 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

There was no factual basis for defendant's guilty plea to exploitation of a child under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(2); while defendant admitted to positioning a blanket that was covering the child and taking pictures of the child's clothed buttocks while the child slept, the child did not engage in lascivious conduct. Carreiro v. State, 5 So. 3d 1170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where defendant was convicted of felonious sexual intercourse with a child under the age of 14, felonious sexual penetration with a child less than 18, and possession of materials depicting children under the age of 18 engaging in sexually explicit conduct, the circuit had not erred in not granting his pretrial motion to suppress evidence obtained by a search warrant based on the statements of the child victim, because she specifically stated that defendant had showed her pictures of nude people on his computer screen doing things she described as "gross." She used language to describe acts performed on her and by her in relation to defendant in such sexually explicit terms that veracity could easily be inferred. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

4. Cross examination.

Where the purported purpose of the prosecution's question to defendant's father was to impeach the credibility of the witness using a prior inconsistent statement made by defendant, the circuit court sustained the objection but denied a mistrial because it determined that the statements would not affect the ultimate issue of the case and could be removed from the minds of the jury by a verbal instruction to disregard. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

5. Mens rea.

Defendant's conviction for the possession of child pornography was appropriate because the State charged him with willful possession of child pornography and the indictment contained language that included an allegation that defendant willfully possessed child pornography; by including that language, the State imposed a mens rea requirement, and it was obligated to prove that aspect of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt. Consequently, it was irrelevant that Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(5) did not include a mens rea element. Renfrow v. State, 34 So. 3d 617 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 31 So. 3d 1217, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 213 (Miss. 2010).

6. Closing arguments.

In a case in which defendant was convicted of enticing a child for sexual purposes, defense counsel's discontinuance of his reasonable doubt argument was not trial court error but rather a choice on the part of defense counsel; even assuming that the trial court impermissibly prohibited defense counsel's reasonable doubt argument, the error was harmless because of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Delashmit v. State, 991 So. 2d 1215 (Miss. 2008).

Where one of defendant's primary defenses was the possibility that someone else had placed the pornographic images on his computer, trial court did not err in denying a mistrial because of comments made by the prosecutor concerning the failure of the defense to call a witness; there was overwhelming evidence, including testimony by a number of witnesses and the actual presence of pornographic images on defendant's computer. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Statements by the prosecutor during cross-examination of a witness and during his closing statements did not warrant a mistrial because the remark had not created negative inferences based upon defendant's choice to exercise his right not to testify. It was clear from the context of the sentences that the prosecutor was referring to the attorneys and not defendant. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

7. Jury instructions.

In a case in which defendant was convicted of enticing a child for sexual purposes, defendant was not entitled to a lesser included offense instruction on misdemeanor indecent exposure; based on the overwhelming evidence, no reasonable jury could have found defendant not guilty of any element of the principal charge. Delashmit v. State, 991 So. 2d 1215 (Miss. 2008).

Circuit had not erred in not giving defendant's proposed instructions that dealt with instructing the jury on circumstantial evidence because the child rape victim's statements about being shown pornography were introduced through the testimony of doctors who examined her and the child was, of course, an eyewitness to the pornography, and that direct evidence alone allowed the jury to be given direct evidence instructions only. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

8. Sentence.

Appellant's sentences for the sexual exploitation of a minor in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(6) and fondling in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23(2) were within the limits prescribed by the statutes; appellant faced up to eighty-five years in prison, and the circuit court sentenced him to the maximum sentence on all charges but required the sentences to run concurrently, effectively reducing appellant's sentence by forty-five years. Argol v. State, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 143 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 2, 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 59 (Miss. 2014), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 60 (Miss. 2014).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Defendant charged with exploitation of children under subsection (2) of this section is not eligible for non-adjudication under § 99-15-26. Terry, Sept. 5, 2003, A.G. Op. 03-0450.

§ 97-5-39. Contributing to the neglect or delinquency of a child; felonious abuse and/or battery of a child.

(1)(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, any parent, guardian or other person who intentionally, knowingly or recklessly commits any act or omits the performance of any duty, which act or omission contributes to or tends to contribute to the neglect or delinquency of any child or which act or omission results in the abuse of any child, as defined in Section 43-21-105(m) of the Youth Court Law, or who knowingly aids any child in escaping or absenting himself from the guardianship or custody of any person, agency or institution, or knowingly harbors or conceals, or aids in harboring or concealing, any child who has absented himself without permission from the guardianship or custody of any person, agency or institution to which the child shall have been committed by the youth court shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by imprisonment not to exceed one (1) year in jail, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) For the purpose of this section, a child is a person who has not reached his eighteenth birthday. A child who has not reached his eighteenth birthday and is on active duty for a branch of the armed services, or who is married, is not considered a child for the purposes of this statute.

(c) If a child commits one (1) of the proscribed acts in subsection (2)(a), (b) or (c) of this section upon another child, then original jurisdiction of all such offenses shall be in youth court.

(d) If the child's deprivation of necessary clothing, shelter, health care or supervision appropriate to the child's age results in substantial harm to the child's physical, mental or emotional health, the person may be sentenced to imprisonment in custody of the Department of Corrections for not more than five (5) years or to payment of a fine of not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or both.

(e) A parent, legal guardian or other person who knowingly permits the continuing physical or sexual abuse of a child is guilty of neglect of a child and may be sentenced to imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections for not more than ten (10) years or to payment of a fine of not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

(2) Any person shall be guilty of felonious child abuse in the following circumstances:

(a) Whether bodily harm results or not, if the person shall intentionally, knowingly or recklessly:

- (i) Burn any child;
- (ii) Physically torture any child;
- (iii) Strangle, choke, smother or in any way interfere with any child's breathing;
- (iv) Poison a child;
- (v) Starve a child of nourishments needed to sustain life or growth;
- (vi) Use any type of deadly weapon upon any child;

(b) If some bodily harm to any child actually occurs, and if the person shall intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly:

- (i) Throw, kick, bite, or cut any child;
- (ii) Strike a child under the age of fourteen (14) about the face or head with a closed fist;
- (iii) Strike a child under the age of five (5) in the face or head;
- (iv) Kick, bite, cut or strike a child's genitals; circumcision of a male child is not a violation under this subparagraph (iv);

(c) If serious bodily harm to any child actually occurs, and if the person shall intentionally, knowingly or recklessly:

- (i) Strike any child on the face or head;
- (ii) Disfigure or scar any child;
- (iii) Whip, strike, or otherwise abuse any child;

(d) Any person, upon conviction under paragraph (a) or (c) of this subsection, shall be sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term of not less than five (5) years and up to life, as determined by the court. Any person, upon conviction under paragraph (b) of this subsection shall be sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term of not less than two (2) years nor more than ten (10) years, as determined by the court. For any second or subsequent conviction under this subsection (2), the person shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

(e) For the purposes of this subsection (2), "bodily harm" means any bodily injury to a child and includes, but is not limited to, bruising, bleeding, lacerations, soft tissue swelling, and external or internal swelling of any body organ.

(f) For the purposes of this subsection (2), "serious bodily harm" means any serious bodily injury to a child and includes, but is not limited to, the fracture of a bone, permanent disfigurement, permanent scarring, or any internal bleeding or internal trauma to any organ, any brain damage, any injury to the eye or ear of a child or other vital organ, and impairment of any bodily function.

(g) Nothing contained in paragraph (c) of this subsection shall preclude a parent or guardian from disciplining a child of that parent or guardian, or shall preclude a person in loco parentis to a child from disciplining that child, if done in a reasonable manner, and reasonable corporal punishment or reasonable discipline as to that parent or guardian's child or child to whom a person stands in loco parentis shall be a defense to any violation charged under paragraph (c) of this subsection.

(h) Reasonable discipline and reasonable corporal punishment shall not be a defense to acts described in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this subsection or if a child suffers serious bodily harm as a result of any act prohibited under paragraph (c) of this subsection.

(3) Nothing contained in this section shall prevent proceedings against the parent, guardian or other person under any statute of this state or any municipal ordinance defining any act as a crime or misdemeanor. Nothing in the provisions of this section shall preclude any person from having a right to trial by jury when charged with having violated the provisions of this section.

(4)(a) A parent, legal guardian or caretaker who endangers a child's person or health by knowingly causing or permitting the child to be present where any person is selling, manufacturing or possessing immediate precursors or chemical substances with intent to manufacture, sell or possess a controlled substance as prohibited under Section 41-29-139 or 41-29-313, is guilty of child endangerment and may be sentenced to imprisonment for not more than ten (10) years or to payment of a fine of not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

(b) If the endangerment results in substantial harm to the child's physical, mental or emotional health, the person may be sentenced to imprisonment for not more than twenty (20) years or to payment of a fine of not more than Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000.00), or both.

(5) Nothing contained in this section shall prevent proceedings against the parent, guardian or other person under any statute of this state or any municipal ordinance defining any act as a crime or misdemeanor. Nothing in the provisions of this section shall preclude any person from having a right to trial by jury when charged with having violated the provisions of this section.

(6) After consultation with the Department of Human Services, a regional mental health center or an appropriate professional person, a judge may suspend imposition or execution of a sentence provided in subsections (1) and (2) of this section and in lieu thereof require treatment over a specified period of time at any approved public or private treatment facility. A person may be eligible for treatment in lieu of criminal penalties no more than one (1) time.

(7) In any proceeding resulting from a report made pursuant to Section 43-21-353 of the Youth Court Law, the testimony of the physician making the report regarding the child's injuries or condition or cause thereof shall not be excluded on the ground that the physician's testimony violates the physician-patient privilege or similar privilege or rule against disclosure. The physician's report shall not be considered as evidence unless introduced as an exhibit to his testimony.

(8) Any criminal prosecution arising from a violation of this section shall be tried in the circuit, county, justice or municipal court having jurisdiction; provided, however, that nothing herein shall abridge or dilute the contempt powers of the youth court.

I. UNDER CURRENT LAW.

1. In general.

Jurisprudence allows an accused to assert a defense theory based upon a mistake-of-fact defense for the offense of felony child deprivation, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1)(b), if reasonably raised by the evidence. Lenard v. State, 51 So. 3d 239 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

To prove the offense of felony child deprivation, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1)(b), the State must prove that the acts or omissions were negligent or intentional. Therefore, this offense does not constitute strict liability. Lenard v. State, 51 So. 3d 239 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Parent's acts of omission, including allowing a two-year-old child to become dehydrated and malnourished, was adequate to constitute felony child abuse. Buffington v. State, 824 So. 2d 576 (Miss. 2002).

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2) does not require that the abuse be dispensed over a period of time before a charge for felonious abuse will arise; the intentional act of murdering a child by any manner or form constitutes felonious child abuse and, therefore, constitutes capital murder under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2); the murder of a child constitutes serious child abuse, and the murder may be elevated to capital murder. Stevens v. State, 806 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. 2001), writ of certiorari denied by 537 U.S. 1232, 123 S. Ct. 1384, 155 L. Ed. 2d 195, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1755, 71 U.S.L.W. 3566 (2003).

"Serious bodily harm," as it pertains to this section, means bodily injury that creates a substantial risk of death, or permanent or temporary disfigurement, or impairment of any bodily organ or function. Wolfe v. State, 743 So. 2d 380 (Miss. 1999).

There was sufficient evidence that defendant committed underlying offense of felonious abuse or battery of child victim to support his capital murder conviction, where evidence suggested that defendant had gone to victim's house to have sex with victim, victim's nude body was discovered in house with her bra pulled behind her head, and victim had multiple wounds on body in addition to fatal chop wound to her head. Brown v. State, 690 So. 2d 276 (Miss. 1996), reh'g denied, 691 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 849, 118 S. Ct. 136, 139 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1997).

One act alone may constitute felonious abuse and/or battery of child; statute does not require that abuse be dispensed over period of time before charge for felonious abuse will arise. Brown v. State, 690 So.

2d 276 (Miss. 1996), reh'g denied, 691 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 849, 118 S. Ct. 136, 139 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1997).

During penalty phase of capital murder prosecution involving murder of child victim while engaging in felonious abuse and/or battery, it was proper to instruct jury that it could consider as aggravating factor that murder had occurred during commission of crime of felonious abuse and/or battery of child. Brown v. State, 690 So. 2d 276 (Miss. 1996), reh'g denied, 691 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 849, 118 S. Ct. 136, 139 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1997).

Elements necessary to prove felonious child abuse are whether defendant did: (1) willfully (2) cause (3) serious bodily harm (4) to child. Yates v. State, 685 So. 2d 715 (Miss. 1996).

Welfare worker exceeded scope of her knowledge and expertise, in prosecution for manslaughter of 11-month-old child, by testifying as lay witness that she was certain the child was given cocaine overdose, which was one cause of child's death, from an adult and through a vaporizer; welfare worker was not proffered as expert on methods of cocaine ingestion, and she had no personal knowledge of how cocaine got into child's bloodstream. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

Jury could have reasonably found, in prosecution for manslaughter of 11-month-old child, that defendants were culpably negligent in failing to obtain prompt medical attention and in failing to supervise their child with result that child ingested cocaine, regardless of how child ingested cocaine; it was the presence of cocaine in an 11-month-old child and not necessarily the way in which it got there that evidenced culpable negligence. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

It was not harmless error, in prosecution for manslaughter of 11-month old child, to admit welfare worker's testimony that she was certain about method by which child ingested cocaine which caused death by overdose, even though such testimony was not necessary to establish culpable negligence; given welfare worker's certainty and her official capacity, her testimony likely was instrumental in the jury's decision. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

Defendants were not harmed, in prosecution for manslaughter of their 11-month-old child, by admission of police officer's testimony that he had asked one defendant whether cocaine had been used to quiet the child, where officer qualified the statement by testifying that defendant had denied using cocaine in that way or in any other way. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

The crime of misdemeanor child neglect is not encompassed within the definition of the more serious crime of felonious child abuse. Payton v. State, 642 So. 2d 1328 (Miss. 1994).

The evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of felonious child abuse under this section where there was evidence that the defendant's beating of his 9-year-old son had left scars on the child's back, and no evidence or testimony was introduced at trial by the defendant. Ahmad v. State, 603 So. 2d 843 (Miss. 1992).

This section does not require a showing of "continuing" abuse toward the child. Ahmad v. State, 603 So. 2d 843 (Miss. 1992).

In a prosecution for felonious child abuse arising from the defendant's beating of his 9-year-old son, the defendant's constitutional right to confront his accuser was not violated, in spite of the defendant's argument that his accuser was his wife and that he was not allowed to "confront" her, where the defendant's wife was not a witness at the trial, the defendant was allowed to fully cross-examine all State witnesses against him, and the record did not indicate that the defendant's wife ever accused him of felonious child abuse. Ahmad v. State, 603 So. 2d 843 (Miss. 1992).

There is no requirement that a pattern of child abuse be established before a defendant can be said to have committed felony child abuse. Monk v. State, 532 So. 2d 592 (Miss. 1988).

Defendant's act of throwing child to pavement which resulted in skull fractures and broken bones clearly was intended to be classified as felonious abuse of child; statute does not require that abuse be dispensed over period of time before charge for felonious abuse will arise. Faraga v. State, 514 So. 2d 295 (Miss. 1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1210, 108 S. Ct. 2858, 101 L. Ed. 2d 894 (1988), reh'g denied, 487 U.S. 1263, 109 S. Ct. 25, 101 L. Ed. 2d 976 (1988), post-conviction relief denied, 557 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 1990).

Intent of legislature was that serious child abusers would be guilty of capital murder if child died. Faraga v. State, 514 So. 2d 295 (Miss. 1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1210, 108 S. Ct. 2858, 101 L. Ed. 2d 894 (1988), reh'g denied, 487 U.S. 1263, 109 S. Ct. 25, 101 L. Ed. 2d 976 (1988), post-conviction relief denied, 557 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 1990).

Statute was not vague at time of defendant's trial, although legislature subsequently amended statute to insert word "or", at which point defendant contended statute could previously have been read to mean "and", because to allow defendant's construction to stand would advocate pummeling and mutilation of children as long as neither torture nor burning was involved. Faraga v. State, 514 So. 2d 295 (Miss. 1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1210, 108 S. Ct. 2858, 101 L. Ed. 2d 894 (1988), reh'g denied, 487 U.S. 1263, 109 S. Ct. 25, 101 L. Ed. 2d 976 (1988), post-conviction relief denied, 557 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 1990).

Indictment charging attempted child abuse may be amended to reflect code section under which defendant is charged and need not use precise words of statute. Watson v. State, 483 So. 2d 1326 (Miss. 1986).

Photographs of injuries of child are admissible, in prosecution of parent for attempted child abuse, on issue of whether fall resulting in injuries was accidental or result of parent's deliberate act. Watson v. State, 483 So. 2d 1326 (Miss. 1986).

2. Indictment.

The court erred by allowing the case to go to the jury on the element of torture, which was not mentioned in the indictment, after finding that there was insufficient evidence to support the element of serious bodily harm, which was mentioned in the indictment. Wolfe v. State, 743 So. 2d 380 (Miss. 1999).

3. Lesser included offenses.

The misdemeanor offense of contributing to neglect of a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1) was not a lesser included offense of felony child abuse in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2), but was a lesser non-included offense as the same facts would have supported both charges; defendant charged with only the felony offense waived any objection based on the giving of the misdemeanor instruction as defendant not only failed to object to the giving of the instruction but had requested it be given. Moore v. State, 799 So. 2d 89 (Miss. 2001).

Trial court's failure to give any manslaughter instructions in prosecution for capital murder during course of felonious child abuse was reversible error; jury was given no choice other than convicting defendant's of capital murder or acquitting him and, at the time, statutes were indistinguishable. (Per Pittman, J., with two Justices concurring, two Justices concurring in the result only, and one Justice concurring in part.) Kolberg v. State, 704 So. 2d 1307 (Miss. 1997).

State Supreme Court's Butler decision, under which defendant was entitled to manslaughter instructions in prosecution for capital murder during course of felonious child abuse, applied retroactively, even though it had been reversed on appeal on other grounds; rule was not specifically designated as "purely prospective" in nature, and failure to give manslaughter instruction was overwhelmingly prejudicial where jury ultimately found that defendant had caused child's death, but not that he either attempted to kill child or intended death. (Per Pittman, J., with two Justices concurring, two Justices concurring in the result only, and one Justice concurring in part.) Kolberg v. State, 704 So. 2d 1307 (Miss. 1997).

Defendant charged with felonious child abuse was entitled to instruction on lesser-included offense of misdemeanor child abuse where evidence adduced at trial was such that jury could have found that defendant inflicted nonaccidental physical injury on victim rather than serious bodily harm; evidence indicated that victim, who was two-year-old child of defendant's live-in girlfriend, had superficial bruises and contusions on buttocks and right thigh and that defendant admitted spanking victim with belt on buttocks but denied bruising victim's thigh. Yates v. State, 685 So. 2d 715 (Miss. 1996).

Evidence did not establish that defendant, who admittedly spanked his live-in girlfriend's two-year-old child three times with belt, inflicted serious bodily harm, rather than nonaccidental physical injury, and thus, evidence was such that reasonable jury could find defendant not guilty of child abuse but guilty of misdemeanor child abuse; evidence included examining physician's testimony that child's bruises were superficial and did not require medical treatment. Yates v. State, 685 So. 2d 715 (Miss. 1996).

Trial court's failure, in prosecution of defendant for felonious child abuse against his live-in girlfriend's two-year-old child, to give instruction on lesser-included offense of misdemeanor child abuse, though error because evidence adduced at trial was such that reasonable jury could have found defendant guilty of misdemeanor child abuse but not guilty of felonious child abuse, did not require new trial, but only required remand for resentencing, where Supreme Court found that the evidence sufficiently established defendant's guilt of misdemeanor child abuse, thus obviating need for child, his family, defendant, or state to be required to endure additional expense and draining of emotions of another trial. Yates v. State, 685 So. 2d 715 (Miss. 1996).

In a prosecution for felony child abuse arising from an infant's ingestion of glass slivers in her food, the evidence was insufficient to support an instruction on the lesser-included offense of misdemeanor child abuse, since no reasonable juror could find that broken glass slivers in an infant's food does not constitute a means likely to cause "serious" bodily injury. Payton v. State, 642 So. 2d 1328 (Miss. 1994).

In a prosecution for felony child abuse arising from an infant's ingestion of glass slivers in her food, the evidence was insufficient to support an instruction on the lesser-included offense of simple assault, since no reasonable juror could find that the glass slivers were not used in "such a manner as to cause serious bodily harm," and there was no evidence from which a juror could conclude that the infant accidentally ingested the glass. Payton v. State, 642 So. 2d 1328 (Miss. 1994).

4. Evidence.

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial as the verdict finding him guilty of felonious child abuse was not against the weight of the evidence because the doctor who treated the child stated that the burns were not on her dominant fingers and that they were from a solid, hot surface; and defendant's explanations for the child's burned fingers were numerous, contradictory, and inconsistent with the medical testimony. Harris v. State, 123 So. 3d 925 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence supported defendant's child abuse conviction because (1) members of defendant's family testified that defendant was alone in a bathroom with defendant's sixteen-month-old child; (2) the family members heard running bath water and defendant spanking the child with a belt; (3) the child suffered a bruise below one eye; (4) a family member said the bath water was steaming hot; and (5) an emergency-room physician testified that the child suffered severe hot-water burns to the lower body. Williams v. State, 122 So. 3d 105 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

There was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that defendant inflicted serious bodily harm on a child under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a), as the physician who examined the child testified that only multiple blows using great force could have caused the child's injuries. Baker v. State, 70 So. 3d 235 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 69 So. 3d 767, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 445 (Miss. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial because the jury was properly instructed on circumstantial evidence, and its verdict was supported by the overwhelming weight of the evidence; two doctors testified that the child's injury could have only been caused by a high-energy impact and that defendant's explanations of how the injuries occurred were not plausible, and one of the doctors testified that he saw multiple red flags indicating child abuse. Rutland v. State, 60 So. 3d 187 (Miss. Ct. App.

2010), affirmed by 60 So. 3d 137, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 152 (Miss. 2011).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant defendant's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because any rational juror could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that all of the elements of felonious child abuse were proven by the State when the evidence presented was sufficient to show, to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis, that defendant's actions resulted in the child's injuries; two doctors testified that the possible scenarios defendant gave for the child's injuries were not plausible, and defendant, who maintained that the child was constantly under her supervision, offered no other plausible explanation for the injuries. Rutland v. State, 60 So. 3d 187 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 60 So. 3d 137, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 152 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for felony child abuse in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a) was appropriate because the evidence was sufficient. In part, medical testimony at trial unequivocally proved that the victim's severe bruising was a temporary disfigurement of a bodily organ. Henry v. State, 40 So. 3d 621 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support the conviction for felonious child abuse, where there was ample evidence to show that the child suffered serious bodily injury, and the doctors who treated the child testified that he had sustained injuries that were life-threatening which he could not have caused to himself. Hill v. State, 40 So. 3d 591 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's claims of the cause of the child's burns were inconsistent with medical evidence; thus, considering the evidence in light most favorable to the State, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have reasonably inferred that defendant intentionally held the child down in scalding water. Anthony v. State, 23 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Reasonable, fair-minded jurors could have concluded that defendant was guilty of felony child abuse, given that (1) he admitted in a handwritten statement that he had shaken the child, (2) there was testimony from two doctors that the child's injuries could not have been caused by a fall from a bouncy seat, (3) one doctor stated that the child's injuries were exclusively caused by a severe shake with the impact of her head hitting a surface, and (4) defendant admitted that he was the only adult present when the child's seat supposedly overturned. German v. State, 30 So. 3d 348 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 142 (Miss. 2010).

In defendant's felony child abuse case under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a), counsel was attempting to prevent the jury from hearing any more testimony about the lingering effects of the child's injuries by stipulating as to the child's condition; the court could not find this action deficient. German v. State, 30 So. 3d 348 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 142 (Miss. 2010).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of felony child abuse where both doctors who treated defendant's nine-week-old son after he was admitted for emergency medical care testified that the child's injuries could not have been self-inflicted, that the injuries could only have been caused by a significant amount of force or trauma, and that the injuries were very recent, where defendant and his wife testified that defendant was the child's sole caretaker during the day while defendant's wife was working and that there was no evidence anyone else cared for the child, and where defendant's neighbor testified that he heard a male voice, inferably defendant's, shout "shut up," a slapping sound, and the sound of a child crying emanating from defendant's apartment. The combination of this evidence could easily lead a reasonable juror to conclude that defendant abused his nine-week-old son. Hill v. State, 17 So. 3d 1092 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 458 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of felony child abuse, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2), where defendant was in the trailer at all times during which the abuse might have happened, he encountered the victim before her injuries were discovered, and the victim identified defendant as her attacker. Kazery v. State, 995 So. 2d 827 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a new trial or for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict following his conviction of felony child abuse because several competent expert witnesses, some of whom treated the victim, testified regarding the victim's injuries and several lay witnesses, including defendant's aunt, family members, and a neighbor, testified as to what they observed on the day the victim suffered his injuries, including hearing a baby crying, a loud thump, and no more crying. Middleton v. State, 980 So. 2d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for felony child abuse based on the State's contention that defendant punished his girlfriend's child for a potty-training accident by holding her in scalding water until her feet were burned was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence where, upon asking the child what happened, the child said that "Daddy did this." An expert in the field of emergency medicine and pediatrics, with special training in child abuse, opined that the child was forcibly placed in the water and held there. Martin v. State, 970 So. 2d 723 (Miss. 2007).

Facts supported defendant's conviction for capital murder as a result of felonious abuse of a child under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(f) because failure to provide medical treatment to a child with severe injuries could be interpreted as intentional; defendant's omission in failing to at least bring the child for whom defendant was caring to a hospital to treat extensive and serious injuries was sufficient to find felonious child abuse. Berry v. State, 980 So. 2d 936 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 204 (Miss. 2008).

Where the evidence showed that defendant was in charge of two minor children when one suffered a head injury that was determined by a treating physician to be intentional, there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for felony child abuse. Wells v. State, 913 So. 2d 1053 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant was convicted of felony child abuse, the trial court did not err in denying her motions for JNOV and a new trial because there was ample undisputed evidence that defendant had intentionally burned the child; the child testified that defendant had forced him to take a bath in scalding hot water and he had permanent, visible scars and, while defendant and her sister testified to a different version of events, the conflict between the two versions was a question of fact for the jury. The jury credited the child's version and the child's testimony alone provided sufficient evidence with which a rational juror could have found that the State had proved the elements of felonious child abuse. Horton v. State, 919 So. 2d 44 (Miss. 2005).

Sufficient evidence supported mother's and stepfather's convictions for felonious child abuse under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2), where they failed to provide adequate medical treatment to child after witnessing numerous falls and failed to offer adequate explanation for the child's multiple fractures and burns, which had occurred in separate incidents. The parents' failure to provide adequate medical treatment to the child after they witnessed or knew of numerous falls that were severe enough to result in multiple fractures could be interpreted as intentional. Scarborough v. State, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 910 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 14, 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 893 So. 2d 265, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 1119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Mother and stepfather's failure to provide adequate medical treatment to their child after they witnessed or knew of numerous falls that were severe enough to result in multiple fractures could be interpreted as sufficient intentional conduct to support their conviction for felonious child abuse under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2) because Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1) of the child abuse statute clearly included acts of omission that result in the abuse and/or battering of any child as misdemeanor crimes, but it did not contain language that designated all acts of omission to be misdemeanor offenses. Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2) pertaining to felonious child abuse included a catch-all, "or otherwise abuse," which has been interpreted by the Mississippi Supreme Court to be a clear indicator that the list provided was not exhaustive. Scarborough v. State, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 910 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 14, 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 893 So. 2d 265, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 1119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's capital murder convictions and death sentence were proper where the killings occurred within a few hours and were all part of the common scheme to rob his ex-father-in-law and eliminate any witnesses, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(f); further, shooting his child fit the description of felony child abuse in that it was a strike to the child in such a manner as to cause serious bodily harm, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39. Browner v. State, 872 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2004).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-1-1 and 97-3-95(1)(d), sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1), none of the issues raised by defendant father rose to the level of reversible error either standing alone or when considered together as the evidence supported the finding that defendant father was the ringleader of the abominable enterprise and he failed to demonstrate any procedural or substantive errors that warranted reversal; thus, defendant father's convictions and sentences were affirmed. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for felonious child abuse because (1) there was no question that the child sustained serious bodily harm or that the blow that caused the injury was intentional because the medical testimony clearly established that the child was not old enough to self-inflict his injuries and could not have sustained his injuries accidentally, and (2) although both the defendant and the child's mother were alone with the child during the time that the child sustained his injuries, it was shown that the defendant lied about various events and the jury determined that he inflicted the injuries. Wheat v. State, 758 So. 2d 1072 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

5. Serious bodily harm.

Evidence supported the convictions of defendants, husband and wife, for third-degree felonious child abuse under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39 because defendants' failure to provide adequate medical treatment for their child after they witnessed his falls, which were severe enough to result in multiple fractures, could be interpreted as intentional. Scarborough v. State, 893 So. 2d 265 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. 2005).

"Serious bodily harm," as it pertains to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2), is any physical injury that amounts to child maltreatment such as death, or permanent or temporary disfigurement, or impairment of any function of any bodily organ or function. Buffington v. State, 824 So. 2d 576 (Miss. 2002).

6. Sentence and punishment.

Defendant's conviction for felony child abuse was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, defendant's claims that his attorney incorrectly informed him that the maximum penalty for felony child abuse was 20 years instead of the correct maximum sentence, which was life in prison, was without merit; the statement made to the jury during voir dire did not say that 20 years was the maximum penalty for felony child abuse but instead merely suggested to the jury the possibility that defendant could go to prison for 20 years, which was a valid possibility under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a). Henry v. State, 40 So. 3d 621 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant who was sentenced to 15 years for felony child abuse did not meet her burden to prove that she was entitled to post-conviction relief because: (1) no reason was presented why the mitigating evidence attached to her motion could not have been discovered previously, and (2) her sentence was within the statutory limits. Austin v. State, 971 So. 2d 1286 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Inmate's claim that when reading Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(c) in conjunction with Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(f), the result was an automatic implication of a capital crime regardless of how or in what manner the child suffered death, was procedurally barred under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-21(1) because it could have been raised on direct appeal and was not; the claim was also without merit because the Mississippi Supreme Court had previously found that upon reading the statutes in conjunction they were constitutional. Brawner v. State, 947 So. 2d 254 (Miss. 2006), dismissed by 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7487 (N.D. Miss. Jan. 27, 2010).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-1-1 and 97-3-95(1)(d), sexual battery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(d), and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1), defendant father was sentenced to five years and a $ 5,000 fine on the conspiracy count; 30 years and a $ 10,000 fine on the sexual battery count; and one year and a $ 1,000 fine on the contributing to the delinquency of a minor charge and the trial court ordered that the prison time be served consecutively; however, nothing in the record or presented by defendant father warranted reversal or reduction of his sentence because his sentence was within the statutory limits and it was a just punishment for the despicable crimes for which he was found guilty by a fair and impartial jury. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

7. Jury instructions.

In a felonious child abuse case, because the child's burns were not caused by a child exploring her environment, the doctor who treated her unequivocally opined that the burns were nonaccidental, the burns came from a hot, solid object, and no reasonable juror could find the child's second-degree burns on nondominant fingers were not considered serious bodily harm, the trial court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on the lesser-offense of simple assault. Harris v. State, 123 So. 3d 925 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

In a felonious child abuse case, because the medical evidence showed that the burns to the child's fingers were second-degree burns, which could not be classified as anything other than serious bodily harm regardless of their cause, no reasonable jury could find defendant guilty of merely misdemeanor child abuse; thus, there was no evidentiary basis for a lesser-included instruction on misdemeanor child abuse. Harris v. State, 123 So. 3d 925 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's convictions for felonious child abuse were appropriate, in part because, while comments made by the trial court might have been improper, the trial court gave a curative instruction stating that the comments had not been intended as commentary on the believability of the victim's testimony and requiring the jury to disregard the comments. Clark v. State, 40 So. 3d 531 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's convictions for felonious child abuse were appropriate, in part because, while comments made by the trial court might have been improper, the trial court gave a curative instruction stating that the comments had not been intended as commentary on the believability of the victim's testimony and requiring the jury to disregard the comments. Clark v. State, 40 So. 3d 531 (Miss. 2010).

In defendant's trial under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a), defendant did admit to shaking the child and his admission to an important element of the crime negated the need for a circumstantial-evidence instruction, such that counsel was not ineffective for failing to proffer such an instruction. German v. State, 30 So. 3d 348 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 142 (Miss. 2010).

Jury instruction defining child abuse as "intentional torture in such a manner as to cause serious bodily injury or the death of any child" was proper because it tracked the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2)(a), and the language of the statute was not vague. Rubenstein v. State, 941 So. 2d 735 (Miss. 2006).

Jury instruction on the elements of felonious child abuse was neither vague nor insufficient as it accurately tracked the language of the felonious child abuse statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39. Rubenstein v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 789 (Miss. Dec. 1, 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. Aug. 10, 2006), substituted opinion at, remanded by 941 So. 2d 735, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. 2006).

8. Capital murder.

Petitioner state death row inmate's argument that the charge of murder for each victim was enhanced by underlying offenses that used murder as an element, thus violating the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment, was rejected because Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(1), described murder to include killing with deliberate design to effect the death of the person killed, and in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(e) defined capital murder as including such a killing when done without any design to effect death by any person engaged in the commission of the crime of felonious child abuse and/or battery of a child in violation Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(2) and child abuse, as had been alleged in the indictment, was not so much an "underlying felony" as an element of the offense of capital murder, thus, the merger doctrine did not really apply. Stevens v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69564 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 15, 2008), affirmed by 618 F.3d 489, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 18696 (5th Cir. Miss. 2010).

II. UNDER FORMER LAW.

11. In general.

In a prosecution for child abuse [Code 1972, § 43-21-27(b)[Repealed] allegedly caused by the infant's parents, the trial court did not err in allowing testimony which showed that the child had sustained fractures of its arms and legs, including X-rays of the injuries which showed varying degrees of healing indicating that the injuries had been inflicted at different times where such evidence strongly supported an ongoing, continuing and purposeful course of criminal abuse of the child and tended to negate the theory that the injuries had been the result of a fall or other isolated accident. The evidence, although circumstantial, supported the conviction where there was no fact or circumstance in evidence tending in any way to support any other reasonable explanation of these injuries except that they had been inflicted by the parents and where no other person was shown to have had custody or care of the infant save its parents. Aldridge v. State, 398 So. 2d 1308 (Miss. 1981).

A father is primarily required by law to support and maintain his children. King v. King, 191 So. 2d 409 (Miss. 1966).

Failure of the title of the Youth Act to mention the offense of contributing to the neglect of a minor child defined in one of its provisions does not invalidate such provision. Matthews v. State, 240 Miss. 189, 126 So. 2d 245 (1961).

The definition of neglected child in Code 1942, § 7185-02(h), is in pari materia with this section [Code 1942, § 7185-13]. Matthews v. State, 240 Miss. 189, 126 So. 2d 245 (1961).

12. Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction of the offense created by this section [Code 1942, § 7185-13] is in the regular criminal courts and not the Youth Court. Harris v. State, 241 Miss. 46, 129 So. 2d 372 (1961).

The Youth Court does not supersede the regular criminal courts in prosecutions under this section [Code 1942, § 7185-13]. Matthews v. State, 240 Miss. 189, 126 So. 2d 245 (1961).

13. What constitutes offense.

This section [Code 1942, § 7185-13] applies to any person who "willfully" commits any act which contributes to, or tends to contribute to, the delinquency of a child, or who "knowingly" aids any child in being a delinquent as defined in Code 1942, § 7185-02. Guyot v. State, 252 Miss. 509, 175 So. 2d 184 (1965).

A mother who entrusted her 7-months-old daughter to a nursery without informing it of the child's need for regular daily medication for a weak heart may be convicted under this section [Code 1942, § 7185-13]. Matthews v. State, 240 Miss. 189, 126 So. 2d 245 (1961).

Where defendant was convicted in justice court under an affidavit charging him with attributing to delinquency of his minor son by permitting and using the son to aid in loading and distributing intoxicating liquors, and defendant appealed to Circuit Court, amendment of affidavit charging defendant contributing to delinquency of son also by knowingly and intentionally permitting son to be present while defendant was loading intoxicating liquors was allowed, since the essential charge was the same in the affidavit and the amendment. Mays v. State, 216 Miss. 631, 63 So. 2d 110 (1953).

Under this statute, employment of minor under age of 18 years to commit or aid in commission of misdemeanor constitutes contributing to his delinquency. Broadstreet v. State, 208 Miss. 789, 45 So. 2d 590 (1950).

In prosecution under this section for contributing to delinquency of minor under 18 years of age, where gravamen of offense is employment of minor to sell whiskey for and at place of appellant, and minor was actually paid by appellant, it is immaterial that minor was working at the place of another who furnished money for his salary. Broadstreet v. State, 208 Miss. 789, 45 So. 2d 590 (1950).

14. Instructions.

A defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed according to subsection (2) of this section, as it read at the time of the commission of the offense prior to the 1989 amendment. Butler v. State, 608 So. 2d 314 (Miss. 1992).

Instruction in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor under age of 18 years which does not follow exact language of indictment but follows statute and defines offense is sufficient. Broadstreet v. State, 208 Miss. 789, 45 So. 2d 590 (1950).

15. Sentence and punishment.

In prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor under 18 years of age, failure to quash jury panel is not error when trial judge in sentencing defendant in case immediately preceding trial of defendant, involving similar circumstances, stated as reason for imposing fine and jail sentence that he was interested in protection of boys and girls, though statement was in presence of prospective jurors, since degree of punishment is matter with which trial jury has no concern. Broadstreet v. State, 208 Miss. 789, 45 So. 2d 590 (1950).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Under subsection (3) of this section a municipality may enact a "parental responsibility" ordinance with appropriate criminal penalties without conflicting with state law. Of course, the ordinance must be reasonable in scope and must pass constitutional scrutiny. Patten, January 10, 1996, A.G. Op. #95-0822.

A person can be charged with the failure to utilize a child restraint device or seat belt and child abuse without violating the double jeopardy clause. Bishop, Feb. 16, 2001, A.G. Op. #2001-0733.

A municipal court has jurisdiction to hear and decide, without a jury, an alleged violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-39(1)(a), and to punish offenders as prescribed by law. The penalty for state misdemeanors tried in a municipal court is limited to six months incarceration and/or a $1,000 fine pursuant to Miss Code Ann. § 21-13-19. Boutwell, March 16, 2007, A.G. Op. #07-00124, 2007 Miss. AG LEXIS 113.

§ 97-5-42. Protection of children from parents convicted of felony child sexual abuse; creation of local registry; penalties; standards for visitation.

(1)(a) For purposes of this section, a conviction of felony parental child sexual abuse shall include any nolo contendere plea, guilty plea or conviction at trial to any offense enumerated in Section 93-15-103(3)(g) or any other statute of the State of Mississippi whereby a parent may be penalized as a felon on account of sexual abuse of his or her own child; and shall include any conviction by plea or trial in any other state of the United States to an offense whereby a parent may be penalized as a felon for sexual abuse of his or her own child under the laws of that state, or which would be so penalized for such conduct had the act or acts been committed in the State of Mississippi.

(b) A certified copy of the court order or judgment evidencing such a conviction shall be accepted by any public office with responsibilities pursuant to this section, and by any court in the State of Mississippi, as conclusive evidence of the conviction.

(2)(a) No person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse shall contact or attempt to contact the victim child without the prior express written permission of the child's then legal custodian, who may be the other parent, a guardian, person in loco parentis or person with legal or physical custody of a child.

(b) No person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse shall harass, threaten, intimidate or by any other means menace the victim child or any legal custodian of the child, who may be the other parent, a guardian, person in loco parentis or person with legal or physical custody of a child.

(c) Any person who believes that a person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse may violate the provisions of subsection (2)(a) or (2)(b) hereof may register with the sheriff and any municipal law enforcement agency of the child's county and municipality of residence, setting forth the factual basis for that belief which shall include a certified copy of the court order or judgment evidencing the conviction of the child sexual abuse felon. The sheriff's office of each county and all municipal law enforcement agencies shall maintain a separate and distinct register for the purpose of recording the data required herein, and shall advise the reporting party of how emergency contact can be made with that office at any time with respect to a threatened violation of subsection (2)(a) or (2)(b) hereof. Immediate response with police protection shall be provided to any emergency contact made pursuant to this section, which police protection shall be continued in such reasonable manner as to deter future violations and protect the child and any person with legal custody of the child.

(d) Any person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse who violates subsection (2)(a) hereof shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one (1) year. Any person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse who violates subsection (2)(b) hereof shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not more than five (5) years.

(3) No person who has been convicted of felony parental child sexual abuse shall be entitled to have parental or other visitation rights as to that child who was the victim, unless he or she files a petition in the chancery court of the county in which the child resides, reciting the conviction, and joining as parties defendant any other parent, guardian, person standing in loco parentis or having legal or physical custody of the child. A guardian ad litem shall be appointed to represent the child at petitioner's expense. The court shall appoint a qualified psychologist or psychiatrist to conduct an independent examination of the petitioner to determine whether contact with that person poses a physical or emotional risk to the child, and report to the court. Such examination shall be at petitioner's expense. The court shall require any such petitioner to deposit with the court sufficient funds to pay expenses chargeable to a petitioner hereunder, the amount of such deposit to be within the discretion of the chancellor. Any defendant and the child through his or her guardian ad litem shall be entitled to a full evidentiary hearing on the petition. In no event shall a child be required to testify in court or by deposition, or be subjected to any psychological examination, without the express consent of the child through his or her guardian ad litem. Such guardian ad litem shall consult with the child's legal guardian or custodians before consenting to such testimony or examination. At any hearing there is a rebuttable presumption that contact with the child poses a physical and emotional risk to the child. That presumption may be rebutted and visitation or contact allowed on such terms and conditions that the chancery court shall set only upon specific written findings by the court that:

(a) Contact between the child and the offending parent is appropriate and poses minimal risk to the child;

(b) If the child has received counseling, that the child's counselor believes such contact is in the child's best interest;

(c) The offending parent has successfully engaged in treatment for sex offenders or is engaged in such treatment and making progress; and

(d) The offending parent's treatment provider believes contact with the child is appropriate and poses minimal risk to the child. If the court, in its discretion, allows visitation or contact it may impose such conditions to the visitation or contact which it finds reasonable, including supervision of contact or visitation by a neutral and independent adult with a detailed plan for supervision of any such contact or visitation.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence.
2. Grand jury.

1. Evidence.

Defendant's convictions for fraud, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-7-10(1), were supported by the evidence because defendant, a deputy clerk at a county tax collector's office, admitted to a police officer to changing the addresses for taxing districts to reduce the fees customers paid for car tags; defendant also admitted to supplying a made-up repair shop listed on a penalty waiver form to enable customers to have their late penalties waived. Gooden v. State, 54 So. 3d 298 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 5, 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where testimony showed that the defendant submitted an invoice to a county board of education for, inter alia, grinding 46 tree stumps, but that only seven or eight tree stumps were actually ground. Pool v. State, 724 So. 2d 1044 (Ct. App. 1998).

2. Grand jury.

Trial court properly denied a public utility's motion to quash a grand jury subpoena because issuance of the subpoena was a lawful exercise of the grand jury's investigative authority, and the evidence was relevant to its investigation and had the potential to result in criminal indictments; if the grand jury was investigating to determine if state laws regarding the tax collection were being followed, it was acting within the scope of its authority and its actions were unquestionable. Entergy Miss., Inc. v. State, 132 So. 3d 568 (Miss. 2014).

§ 97-7-11. Conspiracy to defraud state; obtaining public funds fraudulently.

If any person shall enter into any agreement, combination or conspiracy to defraud the State of Mississippi, or any department or political subdivision thereof, by obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or allowance from the public funds of the state, or of any department or political subdivision thereof, of any false or fraudulent claim, he shall be subject to indictment therefor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the state penitentiary for a term not to exceed five years, or shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1000.00, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court.

Such penalty when collected, less the reasonable cost and expense of action or suit, shall be paid into the treasury of this state. Two (2) or more penalties may be sued for and recovered in the same action or suit. The words “flag,” “standard,” “color,” or “ensign,” as used in this section, shall include any flag, standard, color, ensign or any picture or representation of either thereof, made of any substance, or represented on any substance, and of any size, evidently purporting to be, either of said flag, standard, color or ensign of the United States of America or a picture or a representation of either thereof, upon which shall be shown the colors, the stars, and the stripes, in any number of either thereof, or by which the person seeing the same, without deliberation, may believe the same to represent the flag, colors, standard or ensign of the United States of America or of the State of Mississippi or Confederate flag.

Editor’s Note — Although the retention of the duplicate penalty provision in the section of the Mississippi Code of 1942 from which this section is derived, § 2159, as amended by Chapter 311, Laws of 1971, was probably inadvertent on the legislature’s part, the office of the attorney general was of the opinion that the duplicate provision should be brought into the Mississippi Code of 1972, and the matter noted for legislative clarification.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Prosecution under federal Flag Protection Act (18 USCS § 700) for burning American flag violated Federal Constitution's First Amendment, as defendants' flag burning constituted expressive conduct; Court would not reconsider holding in earlier case that flag burning as mode of expression enjoys full protection of First Amendment; Act improperly suppressed expression out of concern for its likely communicative impact even though it contained no explicit content-based limitation on scope of prohibited conduct, therefore was subject to most exacting scrutiny, Act did not advance government's legitimate interest in preserving flag's function as incident of sovereignty, and even assuming national consensus favoring prohibition against flag burning, suggestion that government's interest in suppressing speech becomes more weighty as popular opposition grows is foreign to First Amendment. United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310, 110 S. Ct. 2404, 110 L. Ed. 2d 287 (1990).

Conviction of protestor for burning American flag as part of political demonstration violated First Amendment, since conduct was sufficiently imbued with elements of communication to implicate First Amendment, state's interest in preventing breaches of peace was not implicated on record in particular case, and state's asserted interest in preserving flag as symbol of nationhood and national unity does not justify conviction. Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S. Ct. 2533, 105 L. Ed. 2d 342 (1989).

A state statute (in this instance, N.Y. former Penal Law § 1425(16)(d), now N.Y. Gen Bus § 136) making it a misdemeanor publicly to mutilate, deface, defile, trample upon, or cast contempt upon an American flag either by words or acts, is unconstitutionally applied insofar as it permits a person to be punished merely for speaking defiant or contemptuous words about the American flag. Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 576, 89 S. Ct. 1354, 22 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1969), on remand, 24 N.Y.2d 1026, 302 N.Y.S.2d 848, 250 N.E.2d 250 (1969).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A state criminal statute prohibiting, among other things, picketing in such a manner as to obstruct or unreasonably interfere with free ingress or egress to and from any courthouses or other public buildings is not so broad, vague, indefinite, and lacking in definitely ascertainable standard as to be unconstitutional on its face, is not void for overbreadth, but is a valid law dealing with conduct subject to regulation so as to vindicate important interests of society. Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 88 S. Ct. 1335, 20 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1968), reh'g denied, 391 U.S. 971, 88 S. Ct. 2029, 20 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1968).

This section [Code 1942, § 2318.5] does not prohibit picketing or mass demonstrations on courthouse grounds, for the prohibited factor is the obstruction or unreasonable interference with free ingress or egress to and from the courthouse. Cam- eron v. Johnson, 262 F. Supp. 873 (S.D. Miss. 1966), probable jurisdiction noted, 389 U.S. 809, 88 S. Ct. 127, 19 L. Ed. 2d 63 (1967), aff'd, 390 U.S. 611, 88 S. Ct. 1335, 20 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1968), reh'g denied, 391 U.S. 971, 88 S. Ct. 2029, 20 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1968).

Federal courts are prohibited by 28 USC § 2283 from enjoining the prosecution in state courts of defendants charged with violating the provisions of this section [Code 1942, § 2318.5]. Cameron v. Johnson, 262 F. Supp. 873 (S.D. Miss. 1966), probable jurisdiction noted, 389 U.S. 809, 88 S. Ct. 127, 19 L. § 97-9-1. Court forms and legal process; printing, selling or distributing simulated legal documents prohibited.

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to print for the purpose of sale or distribution, to circulate or offer for sale, to send or deliver, to cause to be sent or delivered, any letter, paper, document, notice of intent to bring suit, or other notice or demand which simulates a form of court or legal process, the intention of which document is to lead the recipient or addressee to believe the same to be a genuine court or legal process, for the purpose of obtaining anything of value.

(2) The printing, circulating, selling, sending or delivery of such simulating document shall be prima facie evidence of such intent, and it shall be no defense to show that the document bears any statement to the contrary, nor shall it be a defense to show that the thing of value sought to be obtained was to apply as payment on a valid obligation.

(3) In prosecutions for violation of this section, the prosecution may show that the simulating document was deposited in the post office for mailing or was delivered to any person with intent to be forwarded, and such showing shall be sufficient proof to the sending or delivery.

(4) Nothing in this section shall prevent the printing, publication, sale or distribution of genuine legal forms for the use of attorneys, clerks of court or justices of the peace.

(5) Any person, firm or corporation violating subsection (1) of this section shall be fined, for the first offense, not less than ten dollars ($10.00) nor more than one hundred dollars ($100.00), or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed thirty (30) days, or by both such a fine and imprisonment; for subsequent offenses, not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed ninety (90) days, or by both such a fine and imprisonment.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A defendant's acquittal of a drug charge at his second trial was irrelevant in a prosecution stemming from attempts to influence jurors in the defendant's first drug trial. King v. State, 580 So. 2d 1182 (Miss. 1991).

The evidence was sufficient to support convictions of conspiracy and bribery stemming from attempts to influence jurors, where the secretary for one of the defendant's attorneys testified that the defendant did some of the talking when he and his father asked her to type up a list containing the jurors' names and that the defendant took the list from her and made photocopies of it, a witness testified that the defendant drove his father to the witness' home where the father discussed the scheme to bribe a juror while the defendant listened, a juror testified that during the trial the defendant and his father entered the store where she worked, though they left without speaking to her, and an investigator testified that he discovered the photocopies of the jury list under the seat of the defendant's truck. King v. State, 580 So. 2d 1182 (Miss. 1991).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Attorney advancing “living expenses.”

1. In general.

A settlement agreement in which insurers paid their liability limit of $5 million and the plaintiffs agreed to sue the defendant automobile manufacturer was not a champertous contract; it was a valid assignment of a chose in action and, therefore, the plaintiffs, the insurers, and their attorneys were not required to execute the statutory champerty affidavits. Sneed v. Ford Motor Co., 735 So. 2d 306 (Miss. 1999).

Mortgagee's assignment of rights under fire and extended care policy on real estate was not champertous, where insureds were not strangers to litigation and had asserted interest in action separate and distinct from interest of mortgagee. Stephen R. Ward, Inc. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 681 F. Supp. 389 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

Holder of mortgage on property destroyed by fire could properly assign its interest in any claims and/or causes of action against insurance company arising out of loss to the property owner, with property owner remaining fully liable to mortgagee for amount still owed on mortgage, and such assignment is not champertous, as property owners who obtain assignment from mortgage company are not strangers to litigation against insurance company and have asserted interest separate and distinct from interest of mortgagee; in issues of propriety of assignment and claims of champerty, analysis is not focused on relationship between assignee and assignor but rather relationships between assignor and insurance company and assignees and insurance company. Stephen R. Ward, Inc. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 681 F. Supp. 389 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

Failure to file affidavit as to absence of receipt of valuable consideration as an inducement to the prosecution of a citizen's suit to abate an alleged liquor nuisance, held to require its dismissal. State ex rel. Carr v. Cabana Terrace, Inc., 247 Miss. 26, 153 So. 2d 257 (1963).

Where the evidence wholly failed to sustain the charge that the state attorney general had threatened to enforce as against the plaintiffs and their attorneys the provisions of the champerty and maintenance statutes and that, as a result of such threats, plaintiffs and their attorneys suffered irreparable injury, there being no controversy between the parties with respect to these statutes, plaintiffs could not maintain portion of their action attacking the constitutionality thereof. Darby v. Daniel, 168 F. Supp. 170 (S.D. Miss. 1958).

2. Attorney advancing “living expenses.”

Chancery court erred in granting summary judgment to a Louisiana attorney in a Mississippi client's legal malpractice action because there was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the attorney's conduct in advancing over $100,000 to the client for “living expenses” violated Miss. R. Prof. Conduct 1.8(e), Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-9-11 and 73-3-57, and voided the parties' contingency-fee contract. Forbes v. Louis St. Martin, — So. 3d —, 2013 Miss. App. LEXIS 124 (Miss. Ct. App. Mar. 5, 2013), reversed by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 258 (Miss. May 22, 2014).

§ 97-9-27. Escape of prisoners; conveying articles useful for escape to felons.

Every person who shall convey into the penitentiary, jail, or other place of confinement any disguise, instrument, arms, or other things useful to any prisoner in his escape, with the intent thereby to facilitate the escape of any prisoner lawfully committed to or detained in such prison, jail, or place for any felony whatever, whether such escape be effected or attempted or not, shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Defendants' conspiracy convictions were proper where the trial court did not err in admitting a letter to the first defendant, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 401 and 402, because the critical fact at issue was whether the first defendant was engaged in a conspiracy to escape, and that letter was evidence that tended to make that fact more probable or less probable than without the evidence. Farris v. State, 906 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

A defendant, indicted for violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2131], could not be convicted where the proof showed that the prisoner he was alleged to be aiding had been released from jail six days prior to the date on which the offense was charged, and there was no evidence that there was at the time any other prisoner in the jail who had been committed for a felony. Vickers v. State, 215 So. 2d 432 (Miss. 1968).

Although the proof may have been sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of aiding the escape of a nonfelon under Code 1942, § 2133, a defendant indicted for violating Code 1942, § 2131 and charged with aiding the escape of a felon should not have been convicted for violating Code 1942, § 2133 where the trial judge failed to order the indictment, record, and proceedings amended to conform with the proof. Vickers v. State, 215 So. 2d 432 (Miss. 1968).

This section [Code 1942, § 2131] does not require that the prisoner whose escape is intended to be aided must be guilty of felony, or that the person who extends the aid must know or believe him to be; it makes guilt consist of the effort to aid an escape by one lawfully in prison on a charge of felony. Holland v. State, 60 Miss. 939 (1883).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of crime of aiding escape of felon where prosecution proved that defendant drove get-a-way car, despite contention that there was no evidence that she had assisted escapee in scaling prison walls, nor that she smuggled into escapee's place of confinement any weapon or instrumentality of escape. Suan v. State, 511 So. 2d 144 (Miss. 1987).

In a prosecution on charges of aiding the attempted escape of a person confined for a felony offense, testimony that an affidavit was sworn out charging such person with burglary of a dwelling, that such person was bound over to await grand jury action on that charge, and that such person was present in jail at the time of the attempted escape, constituted sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably conclude that such person was confined for a felony within the meaning of this section. Pryor v. State, 349 So. 2d 1063 (Miss. 1977).

Constitution secures to one charged with violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2132] only right to be advised of nature of charge against him, and not right to have set forth facts relied on to sustain charge. State v. Needham, 182 Miss. 663, 180 So. 786, 116 A.L.R. 1100 (1938).

Indictment held sufficient to charge crime of accessory after the fact to crime of murder, although it did not allege specific acts committed by defendant. State v. Needham, 182 Miss. 663, 180 So. 786, 116 A.L.R. 1100 (1938).

A verdict rendered on an indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2132] in these words, "We, the jury, on our oaths do find defendant guilty of negligently permitting the escape of the convict named in the indictment, but not guilty of feloniously aiding or assisting him to escape," amounts to an acquittal. The indictment did not charge that the accused was jailer. Westbrook v. State, 52 Miss. 777 (1876).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A sheriff's duties with respect to operating a jail and keeping prisoners confined were discretionary in nature and, therefore, the sheriff was entitled to the protection of qualified immunity in a suit to recover for the wrongful death of a victim who was murdered by escaped inmates. McQueen v. Williams, 587 So. 2d 918 (Miss. 1991).

Whenever an escape is shown, the law implies negligence on the part of the sheriff into whose custody the prisoner has been placed, and it is not necessary for the state to prove negligence to procure conviction. If the escape be shown, such officer must show, to avoid conviction, that it was caused by the act of God, or other irresistible force. The insecurity of the jail does not constitute a defense. Shattuck v. State, 51 Miss. 575 (1875).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

A sheriff is not lawfully obligated to receive municipal prisoners unless the city has a contract with the county to do so. Sanders, Dec. 9, 2005, A.G. Op. 05-0587.

The statute [Code 1942, § 2142.5] is a felony statute notwithstanding its provision for a fine as an alternative to imprisonment in the penitentiary. Bellew v. Dedeaux, 240 Miss. 79, 126 So. 2d 249 (1961).

This statute [Code 1942, § 2142.5] is not unconstitutional as containing two subject matters in that the punishment prescribed may be either imprisonment in the penitentiary or fine and commitment to the county jail. Bellew v. State, 238

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.

1. In general.

Without waiving the procedural bar to the inmate's claim that the inmate's sentence was unconstitutional, the court held that the inmate was properly charged under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-45 and entered a plea of guilty to the escape, and the sentence of three years was well within the maximum prescribed by the statute, which referred to prisoners sentenced to the Mississippi Department of Corrections and allowed a maximum sentence of five years, and thus the inmate was not entitled to post-conviction relief; although the inmate was in custody and on a work program for a county at the time of the escape, the inmate was considered under the Department's jurisdiction for purposes of § 97-9-45 because (1) the inmate's original burglary sentence required imprisonment in the "penitentiary" under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, which term meant any facility under the jurisdiction of the Department pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-3, (2) commitment to any institution within the jurisdiction of the Department was to the Department, not a particular institution pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-110, and (3) under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-541, the Department recommended rules concerning the participation of inmates in work programs. Gardner v. State, 848 So. 2d 900 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

A defendant's conviction for escape under this section constituted a "felony" and, therefore, he was properly sentenced as a habitual offender under § 99-19-83. Beckham v. State, 556 So. 2d 342 (Miss. 1990).

While the State is not required to prosecute a criminal defendant under the statute with a lesser penalty when the facts which constitute a criminal offense may fall under either of 2 statutes, if the indictment is ambiguous, the accused can only be punished under the statute with the lesser penalty. Thus, a defendant who was indicted for escape was required to be prosecuted under this section, which simply takes away earned time towards parole, rather than § 97-9-49, which provides for a possible sentence of up to 2 years, where the indictment was silent as to the applicable statute. Beckham v. State, 556 So. 2d 342 (Miss. 1990).

Public policy supports the requirement that a prisoner use legal methods, rather than escape, to vindicate his or her rights. Thus, where a defendant was imprisoned under color of law but alleged that he had not been afforded a hearing since his incarceration and had not been given the opportunity to post bond or to be represented by counsel, any attempt at redress should have been and should always be through regular legal channels and not via a self-help escape process. Brown v. State, 552 So. 2d 109 (Miss. 1989).

Where it is the threats of prison or jail officials which precipitate a prisoner's escape, the prisoner is not required to return to the custody of the official making the threats in order to preserve the defense of necessity. However, there are numerous law enforcement or other governmental agencies to whom a prisoner might safely report and from whom he could receive assistance in resolving his dangerous situation. Thus, an escaped prisoner who made no effort whatsoever to communicate with anyone in authority about his alleged predicament, even though he had ample opportunity to do so, waived the defense of necessity. Corley v. State, 536 So. 2d 1314 (Miss. 1988).

Prisoner convicted of escape from county jail, where prisoner is being held pending results of appeal of conviction for which prisoner has been sentenced to life imprisonment in state penitentiary, may be sentenced under this section, but not under § 97-9-49, where indictment for jail escape does not specify which statute has been violated. Cunningham v. State, 478 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1985).

Where a prisoner escaped from the county jail, the trial court erred in sentencing him under this section instead of § 97-9-49, which governs escape from a county jail). Moore v. State, 461 So. 2d 768 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution for attempted escape, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant, who was under a sentence of life imprisonment for a murder conviction, to a term of two years under § 97-9-49, where the correct sentence for defendant under this section, which specifically covers persons convicted of escape from custody after being sentenced to the penitentiary for life, would be forfeiture of all earned time toward a parole. Carleton v. State, 438 So. 2d 278 (Miss. 1983).

Generally, when facts constituting a criminal offense may fall within either of two or more statutes or there is substantial doubt as to which applies, the statute imposing the lesser punishment must be applied. Accordingly, where a prisoner who was entrusted to leave the jail for designated purposes, including errands, and was entrusted to do this alone, willfully failed to return to the jail, § 97-9-49 providing for an additional sentence not exceeding 6 months of the original sentence for wilfully failing to return to the jail within the stipulated time applied rather than this section providing for a maximum sentence of 5 years for a prisoner escaped from the Department of Corrections. Bourdeaux v. State, 412 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1982).

Defendant should be required to serve term for offense of escaping from jail independent of original sentence. Jones v. State, 158 Miss. 366, 130 So. 506 (1930).

That robbery case was afterward reversed on appeal could not affect or diminish defendant's crime of escaping from jail while under penitentiary sentence. Jones v. State, 158 Miss. 366, 130 So. 506 (1930).

Penalty for attempt to escape from county jail limited to a year's imprisonment. Floyd v. State, 140 Miss. 884, 105 So. 765 (1925).

2. Indictment.

Defendant was adequately informed by the indictment of the nature of the escape charge against him and the supporting facts, where the State offered proof that defendant had been convicted of vehicular homicide and sentenced to the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections, that pending transportation, he was housed at the county jail, and that he escaped from the jail. Jenkins v. State, 881 So. 2d 870 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), affirmed in part and reversed in part by, remanded by 888 So. 2d 1171, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1268 (Miss. 2004).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Indictment contained in defendant's "pen pack" was relevant and admissible during penalty phase of capital murder case to show that defendant's previous escape was crime of violence for purposes of statutory aggravating factor. Russell v. State, 670 So. 2d 816 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 982, 117 S. Ct. 436, 136 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1996), cert. dismissed, 520 U.S. 1249, 117 S. Ct. 2406, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1064 (1997).

Public policy supports the requirement that a prisoner use legal methods, rather than escape, to vindicate his or her rights. Thus, where a defendant was imprisoned under color of law but alleged that he had not been afforded a hearing since his incarceration and had not been given the opportunity to post bond or to be represented by counsel, any attempt at redress should have been and should always be through regular legal channels and not via a self-help escape process. Brown v. State, 552 So. 2d 109 (Miss. 1989).

Where it is the threats of prison or jail officials which precipitate a prisoner's escape, the prisoner is not required to return to the custody of the official making the threats in order to preserve the defense of necessity. However, there are numerous law enforcement or other governmental agencies to whom a prisoner might safely report and from whom he could receive assistance in resolving his dangerous situation. Thus, an escaped prisoner who made no effort whatsoever to communicate with anyone in authority about his alleged predicament, even though he had ample opportunity to do so, waived the defense of necessity. Corley v. State, 536 So. 2d 1314 (Miss. 1988).

Defendant's demurrer to an indictment charging him with attempt to escape from the Mississippi Department of Corrections should have been sustained, since the indictment did not state a violation of § 97-9-47, making it unlawful for convicts imprisoned in a penitentiary to attempt to escape from such prison, nor did it state a violation of § 97-9-51[Repealed], which covers those persons attempting escape from the county jail. Stinson v. State, 443 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 1983), but see McCarty v. State, 554 So. 2d 909 (Miss. 1989).

(1)(a) Whoever escapes or attempts by force or violence to escape from any jail in which he is confined, or from any custody under or by virtue of any process issued under the laws of the State of Mississippi by any court or judge, or from the custody of a sheriff or other peace officer pursuant to lawful arrest, shall, upon conviction, if the confinement or custody is by virtue of an arrest on a charge of felony, or conviction of a felony, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five (5) years to commence at the expiration of his former sentence, or, if the confinement or custody is by virtue of an arrest of or charge for or conviction of a misdemeanor, be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one (1) year to commence at the expiration of the sentence which the court has imposed or which may be imposed for the crime for which he is charged.

(b) Whoever escapes or attempts by force or violence to escape from any confinement for contempt of court, shall, upon conviction, be found guilty of a misdemeanor and sentenced to imprisonment not to exceed six (6) months in the county jail.

(2) Anyone confined in any jail who is entrusted by any authorized person to leave the jail for any purpose and who willfully fails to return to the jail within the stipulated time, or after the accomplishment of the purpose for which he was entrusted to leave, shall be an escapee and shall be subject to the penalties provided in subsection (1).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

2. Indictment sufficient.
3. "Force or violence".
4. Defense of necessity.
5. Failure to specify statute.
6. Authority to release from jail.
7. Evidence.

1. In general.

Trial court erred in admitting evidence of defendant's escape into defendant's trial for murder; however, this error was harmless because the evidence of flight paled in comparison to more direct evidence of guilt. Shaw v. State, 915 So. 2d 442 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not commit error when it imposed upon defendant a two-year sentence for escape under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1) where defendant was in jail awaiting trial for armed robbery when defendant escaped, force or violence was not required for the section to apply to an escape, as opposed to an "attempted escape", and it was within the discretion of the trial judge to impose consecutive sentences when defendant pled guilty to both crimes. Smith v. State, 868 So. 2d 1041 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant stated in his petition to enter a plea that he knew the sentence for escape, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1), would be consecutive to the sentences for aggravated assault and kidnapping; the statute also provided that if a prisoner was being held on felony charges, whether he had been convicted or not, then an escape could be punished by a term not to exceed five years in the penitentiary. Coffey v. State, 856 So. 2d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 859 So. 2d 1017, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 596 (Miss. 2003).

Trial judge sentenced defendant within the boundaries of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1); the sentence of five years did not exceed the maximum allowed by law and was not contrary to public policy. Coffey v. State, 856 So. 2d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 859 So.

2d 1017, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 596 (Miss. 2003).

State was required to prove that defendant was held due to his arrest on felony charges, which made his leaving the jail an escape; lawful custody was required to sustain a conviction for escape. Smith v. State, 800 So. 2d 535 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1) is applicable to escapees who have not yet been convicted and sentenced. Edget v. State, 791 So. 2d 311 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The defendant committed felony escape, rather than misdemeanor escape where, at the time of his escape, he was being held on pending felony charges. Cressionnie v. State, 797 So. 2d 289 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001), remanded by 174 Fed. Appx. 246, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 9927 (5th Cir. Miss. 2006).

Public policy supports the requirement that a prisoner use legal methods, rather than escape, to vindicate his or her rights. Thus, where a defendant was imprisoned under color of law but alleged that he had not been afforded a hearing since his incarceration and had not been given the opportunity to post bond or to be represented by counsel, any attempt at redress should have been and should always be through regular legal channels and not via a self-help escape process. Brown v. State, 552 So. 2d 109 (Miss. 1989).

A deputy sheriff who was in charge of a jail based on orders given by the sheriff was an "authorized person" within the meaning of subsection (2) of this section. Brown v. State, 552 So. 2d 109 (Miss. 1989).

Subsection (1) of this section covers 2 separate and distinct offenses; escape and attempted escape. Miller v. State, 492 So. 2d 978 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution for murder the defendant was improperly sentenced under this section, where defendant escaped prior to his sentencing, and where inasmuch as the defendant was not subject to any "former sentence" at the time he escaped his escape was not within the purview of this section providing that a sentence upon conviction would “commence from the expiration of his former sentence.” Williams v. State, 420 So. 2d 562 (Miss. 1982).

Penalty for attempt to escape from county jail limited to a year’s imprisonment. Floyd v. State, 140 Miss. 884, 105 So. 765 (1925).

2. Indictment sufficient.

Defendant was adequately informed by the indictment of the nature of the felony escape charge against defendant and the supporting facts because the indictment stated that defendant willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously escaped by force from the custody of a county sheriff’s department, pursuant to lawful process or arrest, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49. Jackson v. State, 121 So. 3d 313 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 2014 Miss. LEXIS 260 (Miss. May 22, 2014).

3. “Force or violence”.

Although defendant argued there was no evidence of “force” to support his conviction for attempted escape by force, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1)(a), the verdict was not against the manifest weight of evidence because someone had tampered with the air conditioning unit on the jail roof above where defendant’s cell was located, a door was off the air conditioning unit, the filter and insulation from the pipes had been ripped and torn, the pipe chase door and the unit were not intended for access or exit, two inmates were spotted through video surveillance on the jail roof, two inmates were seen climbing the fence located around the jail, and defendant was apprehended at the fence. Stewart v. State, 69 So. 3d 768 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Hole used by defendant, a two-foot wide opening in a chain-link roof over the recreational yard, was not intended as an exit. The photographs of the hole established that the chain link roof was pulled, pried, or twisted from the wire which held it in place; thus, the record clearly proved the use of force as to defendant’s conviction for attempted felony escape. Herrington v. State, 911 So. 2d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 601 (Miss. 2005).

The “force or violence” wording of subsection (1) of this section refers only to attempted escape and not to the separate and distinct offense of escape. Miller v. State, 492 So. 2d 978 (Miss. 1986).

Evidence that accused used force or violence is not necessary to prove the offense of escape which consists of (a) the knowing and voluntary departure of a person (b) from lawful custody and (c) with intent to evade the due course of justice. Miller v. State, 492 So. 2d 978 (Miss. 1986).

4. Defense of necessity.

Where it is the threats of prison or jail officials which precipitate a prisoner’s escape, the prisoner is not required to return to the custody of the official making the threats in order to preserve the defense of necessity. However, there are numerous law enforcement or other governmental agencies to whom a prisoner might safely report and from whom he could receive assistance in resolving his dangerous situation. Thus, an escaped prisoner who made no effort whatsoever to communicate with anyone in authority about his alleged predicament, even though he had ample opportunity to do so, waived the defense of necessity. Corley v. State, 536 So. 2d 1314 (Miss. 1988).

5. Failure to specify statute.

Defendant’s counsel had stipulated that defendant was in custody on a felony charge. Thus, there was not due process violation because the indictment failed to distinguish between a felony and a misdemeanor charge of attempted escape. Herrington v. State, 911 So. 2d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 601 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant’s conviction for escape was affirmed but his sentence of five years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections was reversed and remanded for resentencing where, because defendant’s indictment specified no particular statute to have been violated, he should have been sentenced to no more than six months for escape. Jenkins v. State, 888 So. 2d 1171 (Miss. 2004).

While the State is not required to prosecute a criminal defendant under the statute with a lesser penalty when the facts which constitute a criminal offense may fall under either of 2 statutes, if the indictment is ambiguous, the accused can only be punished under the statute with the lesser penalty. Thus, a defendant who was indicted for escape was required to be prosecuted under § 97-9-45, which simply takes away earned time towards parole, rather than this section, which provides for a possible sentence of up to 2 years, where the indictment was silent as to the applicable statute. Beckham v. State, 556 So. 2d 342 (Miss. 1990).

An inmate's failure to return to jail from an authorized departure to work at the sheriff's office gas station constituted an escape pursuant to subsection (2) of this section and, therefore, the inmate was properly sentenced under subsection (2) of this section, which provides for a maximum sentence of 6 months for failure to return from an authorized leave, as opposed to subsection (1) of this section, which provides for a maximum sentence of 5 years for escape from jail. State v. Bradford, 522 So. 2d 227 (Miss. 1988).

Prisoner convicted of escape from county jail, where prisoner is being held pending results of appeal of conviction for which prisoner has been sentenced to life imprisonment in state penitentiary, may be sentenced under § 97-9-45, but not under this section, where indictment for jail escape does not specify which statute has been violated. Cunningham v. State, 478 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1985).

Where a prisoner escaped from the county jail, the trial court erred in sentencing him under § 97-9-45 instead of this section, which governs escape from a county jail). Moore v. State, 461 So. 2d 768 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution for attempted escape, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant, who was under a sentence of life imprisonment for a murder conviction, to a term of two years under this section, where the correct sentence for defendant under § 97-9-45, which specifically covers persons convicted of escape from custody after being sentenced to the penitentiary for life, would be forfeiture of all earned time toward a parole. Carleton v. State, 438 So. 2d 278 (Miss. 1983).

Generally, when facts constituting a criminal offense may fall within either of two or more statutes or there is substantial doubt as to which applies, the statute imposing the lesser punishment must be applied. Accordingly, where a prisoner who was entrusted to leave the jail for designated purposes, including errands, and was entrusted to do this alone, willfully failed to return to the jail, this section providing for an additional sentence not exceeding 6 months of the original sentence for wilfully failing to return to the jail within the stipulated time applied rather than § 97-9-45 providing for a maximum sentence of 5 years for a prisoner escaped from the Department of Corrections. Bourdeaux v. State, 412 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1982).

6. Authority to release from jail.

Where the record evidence clearly indicated that the defendant was pleading guilty to escape from an officially arranged jail release, rather than forcible or violent escape, the maximum sentence was 6 months; thus, it was error for the court to impose a five year sentence. Ward v. State, 708 So. 2d 11 (Miss. 1998).

Sheriff has no authority to release from jail prisoner who has been placed in custody of sheriff by court order without procuring court order allowing release; sheriff who releases prisoner, without court order, on basis of alleged mental and physical problems requiring hospitalization of prisoner, may be held in contempt of court. Coleman v. State, 482 So. 2d 221 (Miss. 1986).

Sheriff who has previously obeyed court orders in releasing prisoners and recording ordered releases on jail docket but who subsequently allows convicted murderer and person convicted of possession with intent to sell controlled substances to leave jail on weekends, without court order and without making jail docket entry to document absence of prisoners, has overstepped bounds of authority and is guilty of criminal contempt. Coleman v. State, 482 So. 2d 219 (Miss. 1986).

7. Evidence.

Defendant's conviction for attempted felony escape in violation of Miss. Code

Ann. § 97-9-49(1) was proper in part because several witnesses testified regarding the attempted escape, including an eyewitness sergeant who testified that defendant scaled the fence and pried apart adjoining sections of the fence. Jones v. State, 974 So. 2d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because defendant violated the conditions of his felony appearance bond on the underlying felony charges of conspiring to smuggle drugs into a county jail, his bond was revoked, and he was arrested. Defendant escaped from custody while being held on felony charges; thus, the evidence showed that he committed felony escape and was subject to the punishment provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-49(1).

Sessom v. State, 942 So. 2d 234 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 716 (Miss. 2006).

The evidence supported a conviction under subsection (2) of this section, but not under subsection (1) of this section, where (1) at the time of the defendant's escape, he was a trustee at the county jail and was authorized by an officer to refuel a patrol car located on some adjacent property 100 to 200 feet away from the sheriff's department, but (2) it was not established whether the defendant's assignment did or did not necessitate the removal of his person from the jail's premises. King v. State, 739 So. 2d 1055 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

The general rules of grand jury secrecy have no application to testimony given by witnesses who are to be used by the State at a pretrial hearing or at trial with respect to charges lodged by an indictment rendered and served as a result of such testimony. Addikson v. State, 608 So. 2d 304 (Miss. 1992).

This section, which prohibits any grand jury witness from disclosing "any action or proceeding had" before the grand jury, does not allow a witness to reveal what he or she said before the grand jury but does not prevent a witness from being questioned in a separate proceeding and being required to answer where the questions overlap or even duplicate what the witness was asked before the grand jury. In re Knapp, 536 So. 2d 1330 (Miss. 1988).

It is not permissible to inquire on the trial of the defendant what evidence the grand jury had when it indicted him. Baldwyn v. State, 125 Miss. 561, 88 So. 162 (1921).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Particular applications.

1. In general.

The phrase "or otherwise" refers to acts or stratagem of the same general nature as the preceding "threats, force or otherwise" within the section, and indicates acts common to or characteristic of the preceding group of words or an approximation thereof. Wilbourn v. State, 249 Miss. 835, 164 So. 2d 424 (1964).

The offense defined in this section [Code 1942, § 2294], requires the state to show an attempt to intimidate or impede an officer in the discharge of his duties by threats, force, abuse, or otherwise. Wilbourn v. State, 249 Miss. 835, 164 So. 2d 424 (1964).

That state's witnesses refused to talk to counsel for accused before being placed on the stand is not ground for reversal; the remedy is by full cross-examination. Mattox v. State, 240 Miss. 544, 128 So. 2d 368 (1961).

The phrase "or otherwise" in this section [Code 1942, § 2294] refers to acts or stratagems of the same general nature as the preceding "threats, force or abuse". Gaston v. State, 239 Miss. 420, 123 So. 2d 546 (1960).

Constructive contempt, or any act calculated to impede, embarrass, obstruct, defeat, or corrupt the administration of courts of justice, when the act is done beyond the presence of the court, is indictable under this section [Code 1942, § 2294]. Sullens v. State, 191 Miss. 856, 4 So. 2d 356 (1941).

Before court can punish for constructive contempt the offense must be judicially stated; proper course taken by citing accused and having his answer charged by information of attempted bribery, and investigating it by taking testimony thereon. Durham v. State, 97 Miss. 549, 52 So. 627 (1910).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2294] it is not necessary to aver in what case the defendant was a witness. Wilson v. State, 80 Miss. 388, 31 So. 787 (1902).

Example of proper averments in an indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2294]. Wilson v. State, 80 Miss. 388, 31 So. 787 (1902).

2. Particular applications.

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-55, which makes it a criminal offense to intimidate a judge, was not unconstitutional where defendant was charged with a violation for making threats against two judges while speaking with a psychologist who treated inmates because U.S. Const. Amend. I permitted states to ban true threats and because the protected status of threatening speech was not based upon the subjective intent of the speaker; rather, the speaker must have knowingly and intentionally communicated a potential threat that an objectively reasonable person would interpret as a serious expression of an intent to cause a present or future harm. Defendant's words posed a true threat because he was diagnosed as having the capacity to distinguish right from wrong, he intentionally communicated the threats to his psychologist and to members of the parole board, and an objectively reasonable person would interpret statements such as intending to "take care of the judges" or "take out the judges" as intending to inflict physical harm upon the judges. Hearn v. State, 3 So. 3d 722 (Miss. 2008).

The evidence was insufficient to support a conviction for attempting to intimidate a witness at the defendant's second burglary trial, where the evidence did not support a finding that the defendant knew that the witness was a witness at the first trial, which ended in a mistrial, or that the witness would be a witness at the second trial; although it was possible that the defendant could have seen the witness at the courthouse during the defendant's first trial, this was insufficient to show that the defendant could thereby have concluded that the witness would testify against him at his second trial. Corley v. State, 584 So. 2d 769 (Miss. 1991).

A defendant's acquittal of a drug charge at his second trial was irrelevant in a prosecution stemming from attempts to influence jurors in the defendant's first drug trial. King v. State, 580 So. 2d 1182 (Miss. 1991).

There was no violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2294] where the accused gave to the sheriff investigating a crime a false statement which was calculated to mislead the officer, but which was not accompanied by force, threats, or abuse. Wilbourn v. State, 249 Miss. 835, 164 So. 2d 424 (1964).

No violation of this statute [Code 1942, § 2294] is committed by ordering off premises officers in pursuit of one not shown to have committed a felony, or an offense in the presence of the officers and for whom they had no warrant of arrest. King v. State, 246 Miss. 86, 149 So. 2d 482 (1963).

Merely protesting to the arresting officer that another should not be arrested as he had done nothing, without threats, show of force, or abuse, does not violate this section [Code 1942, § 2294]. Gaston v. State, 239 Miss. 420, 123 So. 2d 546 (1960).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Although this section makes it a misdemeanor for a bailiff to go into the jury room after the jury has retired, defendant's motion for a mistrial was properly denied, where the bailiff merely walked into the jury room to see how warm it was, after the jury complained of discomfort due to heat, and where there was no evidence of any impropriety occurring in the jury room. Leflore v. State, 439 So. 2d 675 (Miss. 1983).

No new trial was warranted on grounds that a deputy sheriff without court authorization drove a bus and ate in the same room with the jurors where the deputy did not testify as a witness in the case on its merits, he did not even appear in the courtroom at any time in the course of the trial, his function was to assist in the process of making it possible for the jurors to eat, his only activity was to respond to the sheriff's direction that he drive the members of the jury, together with the two bailiffs, to the restaurant in the bus, and at all times complained of the jurors were in the protective custody of the bailiff; however, it would have been better policy for the bus driver to receive in open court detailed instructions from the trial judge in the presence of jurors, bailiffs, counsel, and the defendant. Bickcom v. State, 286 So. 2d 823 (Miss. 1973).

In prosecution for manslaughter when jury during deliberations asked the bailiff what the penalty was for manslaughter and the bailiff replied that penalty was from one month to ten years, and the jury subsequently found defendant guilty of manslaughter and recommended that accused be given mercy of the court, such communication affected the integrity of the verdict and required reversal of conviction. Horn v. State, 216 Miss. 439, 62 So. 2d 560 (1953).

1. Formal complaint needed.

Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) contended that the judge committed perjury; however, the Commission never formally charged the judge with perjury and therefore, in the absence of a formal complaint and a hearing on the merits, the supreme court lacked the authority to accept the finding of the Commission on the perjury count. Miss. Comm’n on Judicial Performance v. Osborne, 11 So. 3d 107 (Miss. 2009).

Mississippi Commission on Judicial Performance (Commission) contended to the Mississippi Supreme Court that the judge committed perjury pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-59; however, the Commission never formally charged the judge with perjury, and thus, in the absence of a formal complaint and a hearing on the merits, the supreme court lacked the authority to accept the finding of the Commission on the perjury count. Miss. Comm’n on Judicial Performance v. Osborne, — So. 2d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 9 (Miss. Feb. 5, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 11 So. 3d 107, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 278 (Miss. 2009).

2. Essentials of offense.

In order to show that a person has corruptly sworn to a material fact, it is necessary that the person charged with the offense knows the fact to be untrue and corruptly and intentionally, and in a manner that is morally and wilfully false, makes the affidavit or commits the perjury, and it is not sufficient to show that he was merely mistaken. Russell v. Bailey, 197 So. 2d 469 (Miss. 1967).

Conviction of perjury, though creating a general disqualification to testify at common law and in Mississippi, goes only to the convict’s credit in the federal court, at least when the conviction was under the federal perjury statute. Firemen’s Mut. Ins. Co. v. Aponaug Mfg. Co., 149 F.2d 359 (5th Cir. 1945).

To constitute perjury, the false swearing must be not only wilful but corrupt or intentionally false. Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541 (1860).

3. How committed.

Affidavit submitted by convicted burglar, recanting earlier testimony for prosecution leading to burglary conviction of alleged accomplice, was proof of perjury and lower court should hear accomplice’s petition for error coram nobis and hold evidentiary hearing. Tobias v. State, 505 So. 2d 1014 (Miss. 1987).

Where a person knowingly swears to a false statement in order to obtain money to which he is not legally entitled and such oath is necessary to the obtaining of the money, he is guilty of perjury. Whether intentional false swearing to a legal claim for money is perjury, quaere. Vance v. State, 62 Miss. 137 (1884).

4. Materiality of testimony.

A defendant’s allegedly false statement in front of the grand jury that he had not returned to his apartment after the discovery of the death of an infant who was at the apartment, was material to the grand jury’s investigation of the death of the infant, and could therefore constitute perjury, since the grant jury’s deliberations could conceivably have been affected, especially concerning the credibility of the defendant, had it known of the defendant’s visit to the apartment and his request that his presence there not be revealed to the authorities. Smallwood v. State, 584 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1991).

Where on a prosecution for an unlawful sale of liquor, defendant pleaded guilty, testimony of the alleged purchaser that he did not purchase the liquor was not material and no predicate for perjury. Long v. State, 100 Miss. 7, 56 So. 185 (1911); McNeice v. State, 101 Miss. 366, 58 So. 3 (1912).

Where the record of the cause in which the false swearing is committed is produced before the court trying the perjury, the materiality of the falsehood to the issue in that cause is a question of law. Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541 (1860).

5. Defenses.

It is no defense to an indictment for perjury to show that the accused testified under fear engendered by the threats of others, the threatened danger not being imminent, impending and unavoidable. Bain v. State, 67 Miss. 557, 7 So. 408 (1890).

6. Indictment.

An indictment for perjury must specifically allege the true facts; thus, an indictment for perjury was fatally defective and should have been quashed where it did not attempt to set out the truth as to the allegation that the defendant had "testified falsely that he had not been court-martialed in the military and that he had an honorable discharge and a general discharge under honorable conditions from the United States Army." Ford v. State, 610 So. 2d 370 (Miss. 1992).

An indictment charging the defendant with the crimes of perjury and conspiracy to commit perjury would not be quashed based upon the fact that the same grand jurors who heard the defendant testify, and were therefore witnesses to his alleged perjury, were the same grand jurors who returned the indictment against him, even though it would have been the better practice not to have sought the perjury and conspiracy indictments from the same grand jury who heard the alleged perjury, where there was no evidence of any fraud or wrongdoing on the part of the grand jurors. Smallwood v. State, 584 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1991).

The rule requiring that the guilt of a defendant indicted for the crime of perjury be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or the testimony of one witness in corroborating circumstances, applies to the false swearing charge in the indictments. Clanton v. State, 210 Miss. 700, 50 So. 2d 567 (1951).

Indictment charging defendant swore falsely in making report to auditor of public accounts, is sufficient to charge that report was made to auditor. State v. Kelly, 113 Miss. 461, 74 So. 325 (1917).

Indictment stating perjury committed on wrong day may be amended to conform to proof. Saucier v. State, 95 Miss. 226, 48 So. 840, 21 Am. Ann. Cas. 1155 (1909).

Indictment must charge perjury committed as to material matter and set out facts. Moore v. State, 91 Miss. 250, 44 So. 817, 124 Am. St. R. 652 (1907).

It is sufficient for the indictment to charge generally that the matter sworn to in the false oath was material to the issue or point of inquiry, without showing how. Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 278, 1 So. 235 (1887).

An averment in an indictment that the accused knew that his statement was false is necessary only when the oath is as to the witness' belief, and if the swearing were absolute, the averment is surplusage. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424 (1879).

7. Proof, generally.

In perjury case, corpus delicti must be established by State and in ordinary case where accused has made only single statement under oath, in order to prove that he lied, it is incumbent upon State to first prove actual truth. Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

To convict person of perjury alleged to have been committed on trial of case in court of record, evidence must show beyond reasonable doubt that defendant was duly sworn in the formal proceeding. Polk v. State, 204 Miss. 538, 37 So. 2d 761 (1948).

Sufficiency of proof of falsity of oath stated. Johnson v. State, 122 Miss. 16, 84 So. 140 (1920).

Conviction of perjury not sustained by uncorroborated evidence of single witness. Lee v. State, 105 Miss. 539, 62 So. 360 (1913).

8. —Sufficiency.

Evidence was sufficient and not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence to convict defendant of perjury during his probation revocation hearing because, inter alia: (1) the state provided the testimony of a district attorney and a federal district court clerk, and introduced into evidence the federal documents that proved that defendant was not under court order to be in the county (in violation of his probation) on October, 13, 2003; thus, because defendant was not required to be in the county on that day, he lied about it at his probation revocation hearing, and therefore under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-59 his perjury conviction was proper. Ford v. State, 956 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The prosecution failed to prove the falsity of the defendant's statement that he had consumed a pint of gin over the lunch recess by a minimum of two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances where the state showed that an intoxilyzer test and a blood test showed no trace of alcohol in the defendant's system; the tests together satisfied only the requirement of corroboration, and there was no state witness who was with or otherwise saw the defendant during the relevant lunch break, or a witness who stated that the defendant admitted that what he said was false. Hammitt v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 403 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 5, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 797 So. 2d 258, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 37 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence was insufficient to establish perjury based on the defendant's statements relating to his having consumed gin and marijuana during a lunch recess in his trial for domestic violence where both an intoxilyzer test and a blood test showed no discernable alcohol in the defendant's system, but no proof that he had not ingested marijuana was offered, and the state failed to present any witness who was with the defendant throughout the lunch recess. Hammitt v. State, 797 So. 2d 258 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence was insufficient to establish that the defendant committed perjury in a murder trial when she gave alibi testimony for the defendant in that trial, who was her significant other, where not one witness gave evidence to support the assertion that the defendant committed perjury and the only direct evidence in support of that contention was found in her daily and weekly employment records, which were inconsistent at best. Hall v. State, 751 So. 2d 1161 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The evidence was insufficient to support a conviction of perjury, which allegedly occurred before the grand jury, where the testimony was tentative and uncertain, it concerned an incident which occurred more than one year earlier, and it was contradictory as to whether the defendant may have told the literal truth to the grand jury. Smallwood v. State, 584 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1991).

Conviction of defendant for perjury was upheld over objection that alleged perjury was not proved by testimony of 2 witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances; common-law rule requiring one witness and corroborating circumstances to sustain perjury conviction refers only to proof of falsity of accused's statement, but does not extend to proof of other elements of crime; testimony of defendant's mother satisfied requirement that one witness testify to falsity of defendant's testimony at trial where perjury was allegedly committed, and her testimony was consistent with defendant's 2 prior sworn statements; to sustain conviction, both of contradictory statements must be under oath. McFee v. State, 510 So. 2d 790 (Miss. 1987).

The testimony of a handwriting expert that a list of items, admittedly made by the defendant, was written by the same person who wrote a questioned document which the defendant had claimed in a previous trial that he had never seen, and the transcript of the evidence of all of the witnesses in the previous trial, including evidence given by the defendant's wife in his defense, were sufficient to meet the requirement of two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances, necessary for a conviction for perjury. Brewer v. State, 233 So. 2d 779 (Miss. 1970).

Although further allegations of the indictment may be proved by a single witness, the falsity of the allegedly perjured statement must be established by the testimony of at least two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances. Nash v. State, 244 Miss. 857, 147 So. 2d 499 (1962).

Where a witness by affidavit made before murder trial stated that the accused had fired the shot and at the trial witness testified he did not know who fired the shot, this was not enough proof to establish perjury. Tribble v. State, 210 Miss. 604, 50 So. 2d 148 (1951).

Ordinarily perjury must be proven by the testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances; where the accused has made conflicting sworn statements, one witness to the falsity of the statement with which he is charged is sufficient. Horn v. State, 186 Miss. 455, 191 So. 282 (1939), criticized, Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987); Tribble v. State, 210 Miss. 604, 50 So. 2d 148 (1951).

If conviction of perjury be sought only on the ground that defendant knew nothing of and was not present at the scene of the transaction about which he gave testimony, it is essential to his conviction that the state should prove by two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances beyond a reasonable doubt arising from the evidence that the defendant was not present at the scene. Whittle v. State, 79 Miss. 327, 30 So. 722 (1901).

Where the accused swore that he had not sold liquors to either of several persons named, proof of separate sales to different persons each by a separate witness is not sufficient. Some one sale must be proved by two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances and proof of one sale is not corroborative evidence of another. Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 278, 1 So. 235 (1887).

It is sufficient if the falsity be shown by one witness and by the defendant's evidence in his own behalf. Vance v. State, 62 Miss. 137 (1884).

9. Need for record or transcript.

A prosecution for perjury without any kind of transcript or verbatim record of the proceedings in question is not per se flawed or reversible. However, in such a situation, the district attorney must make an effort to preserve in some manner the questions asked and the answers given by the defendant. Smallwood v. State, 584 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1991).

To convict person of perjury alleged to have been committed on trial of case in court of record, production of record in that case, or of duly authenticated transcript thereof, is essential, unless formal proofs of such judicial proceeding are waived or dispensed with by admission or otherwise. Polk v. State, 204 Miss. 538, 37 So. 2d 761 (1948).

That alleged perjured testimony was given in duly constituted court cannot be proven by testimony of circuit clerk and court reporter showing organization of court at the term at which the indictment charged that the perjury was committed. Polk v. State, 204 Miss. 538, 37 So. 2d 761 (1948).

Under an indictment for perjury, the trial of the cause in which the false swearing is charged to have been committed must be proved by the record if it be in existence. Whittle v. State, 79 Miss. 327, 30 So. 722 (1901).

10. —Of conflicting statements.

Proof that accused knowingly and willfully made two mutually contradictory statements on material matter under oath, without more, can support conviction of perjury, but only in certain factual scenarios. Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

Even where accused has made statements under oath which are at variance with or contradict one another, State in usual case is in position to designate on which date he lied, and make proof by showing true facts on that date, because as general rule, it is fact that State is easily capable of showing truth that makes perjury blatant and so deserving of punishment; contradictory statements made by accused in such instances are strong corroborating evidence of perjury. Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

Where State has evidence upon which to allege and prove on which date accused lied in perjury prosecution, it should be specified and charged in indictment and such evidence presented to jury; mutually contradictory statements by accused in such instances serve only as corroboration of state's case; however, where state is unable to offer such evidence, it should be able to proceed on basic question with proof it has, namely, two mutually contradictory statements made under oath. Adoption of this rule necessarily carries with it limitation that it can only be used when state is unable to offer additional proof as to precise date accused lied, and evidence aliunde as to truth of matter about which accused testified. Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

Where there was no evidence as to the falsity of the statement with which a defendant was charged other than his own conflicting statement as to the identity of one accused of selling intoxicating liquors made on the two trials of such accused, defendant could not be convicted of perjury. Horn v. State, 186 Miss. 455, 191 So. 282 (1939), criticized, Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

Where a witness testified on the trial of one for selling intoxicating liquors that she was the person who sold the liquor, and on a second trial testified that he could not swear that she was the person, such witness could not be convicted of perjury since there was no evidence as to the falsity of the statement with which the witness was charged other than his own conflicting statement. Horn v. State, 186 Miss. 455, 191 So. 282 (1939), criticized, Hogan v. State, 516 So. 2d 474 (Miss. 1987).

11. Materiality.

The defendant's statements relating to his having consumed gin during a lunch recess in his trial for domestic violence were material to the proceeding to the extent that they were part of the story that he was under the influence of something that would impair his ability to testify as such assertion, whether true or not, had the potential to delay the jury's investigation of whether he was guilty of the domestic violence charges brought against him. Hammett v. State, 797 So. 2d 258 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The defendant's statements relating to his having consumed gin during the lunch recess were material to the proceeding against him as the truth or falsity of his statements regarding whether he had consumed gin had the effect of impeding the jury's investigation of whether he was guilty of the charges brought against him and it made no difference whether the statements in question actually impeded the investigation. Hammett v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 403 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 5, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 797 So. 2d 258, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 37 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Ordinarily, materiality in a perjury case may be shown by offering that portion of the prior proceeding necessary to identify matters there at issue. The trial judge may then consider the alleged perjured testimony in light of the issues and resolve the materiality question. The trial judge in a perjury trial should be sensitive to the possibilities that the presence of and identification of another judge and the district attorney on the side of the prosecution may substantially prejudice the defendant in the eyes of the jury. Nevertheless, such evidence is not, per se, inadmissible. Where the prosecution offers witnesses to prove materiality, reversal is not ordinarily warranted. Gullett v. State, 523 So. 2d 296 (Miss. 1988).

12. Variance.

Fatal variance where indictment charges person with having sworn that "he did not buy certain things," where evidence showed he testified "that he didn't remember whether he bought or not—that he couldn't recollect." Willoughby v. State, 101 Miss. 60, 57 So. 361 (1912).

If the indictment charge that the perjury was committed in giving evidence in a cause, proof that a party made a false affidavit will not do unless it be shown that the affidavit was allowed to be used in evidence. Copeland v. State, 23 Miss. 257 (1852).

13. Instructions.

In an appeal from a conviction of perjury, the fact that the jury's guilty verdict can be supported by the evidence does not automatically excuse the trial court's failure to give an instruction on the "two witness" rule required in perjury cases. Hale v. State, 648 So. 2d 531, 41 A.L.R.5th 801 (Miss. 1994).

In a prosecution for perjury, the "two witness" instruction should be given even if the defendant fails to request it. Hale v.

State, 648 So. 2d 531, 41 A.L.R.5th 801 (Miss. 1994).

In a prosecution for perjury, the trial court's failure to instruct the jury in accordance with the "two witness" rule as required in perjury cases constituted reversible error where one specific witness or piece of documentary evidence could not be singled out as having been sufficient to convict the defendant of perjury. Hale v. State, 648 So. 2d 531, 41 A.L.R.5th 801 (Miss. 1994).

The failure of the court to instruct, either in instructions for the state or in instructions for defendant, as to the quantitative evidence rule in perjury cases constituted reversible error. Nash v. State, 244 Miss. 857, 147 So. 2d 499 (1962).

It is unnecessary for an instruction requiring the swearing to be wilfully false to state that it must have been corruptly so since the former implies the latter. Morgan v. State, 63 Miss. 162 (1885).

It is unnecessary for an instruction requiring the swearing to be willfully false to state that it must have been corruptly so since the former implies the latter. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424 (1879).

The jury should be informed by instruction that before it can convict the fact that the swearing was false must be shown to its satisfaction by the testimony of two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424 (1879).

14. Perjurer as witness in subsequent cause.

The incompetency of a perjurer to become a witness is based upon a verdict of guilty, and since the presumption of innocence extends to an accused in all criminal cases until disproved on a fair and impartial trial, until alleged perjurer is convicted it is not error to permit him to testify as a witness. Isonhood v. State, 274 So. 2d 685 (Miss. 1973).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Indictment for subornation of perjury must state circumstances of issue or point of inquiry in which perjury was committed; simple statement in indictment that defendant procured someone to perjure himself is not sufficient; indictment should state name of crime, to make clear materiality of testimony given; and, indictment should allege what facts constitute truth, as well as allegation of falsity of testimony. Hentz v. State, 510 So. 2d 515 (Miss. 1987).

In prosecution for subornation of perjury in attempting to procure a witness to testify that one Cox, accused of selling cocaine, did not sell him cocaine, state must show that Cox made the sale to the witness and that accused knew of that fact when he attempted to influence the witness. Smith v. State, 107 Miss. 404, 65 So. 642 (1914).

There is a fatal variance between the charge that accused suborned false testimony that witness had not bought liquors from a certain person within two years, and proof that the witness testified that he could not remember when the purchase was made. Harris v. State, 103 Miss. 739, 60 So. 769 (1913).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

An essential element of this offense is that both the accused and the witness knew that the testimony which the accused wanted the witness to give was false, which element must be charged in the indictment as a fact unless it is a necessary or inescapable inference from other facts charged. Neeley v. State, 202 Miss. 736, 32 So. 2d 449 (1947).

An indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2318] is demurrable if it fail to

(1) The driver of a motor vehicle who is given a visible or audible signal by a law enforcement officer by hand, voice, emergency light or siren directing the driver to bring his motor vehicle to a stop when such signal is given by a law enforcement officer acting in the lawful performance of duty who has a reasonable suspicion to believe that the driver in question has committed a crime, and who willfully fails to obey such direction shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisoned in the county jail for a term not to exceed six (6) months, or both.

(2) Any person who is guilty of violating subsection (1) of this section by operating a motor vehicle in such a manner as to indicate a reckless or willful disregard for the safety of persons or property, or who so operates a motor vehicle in a manner manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or by commitment to the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections for not more than five (5) years, or both.

Each law enforcement agency may create their own such policies or adopt an existing model. All pursuit policies created or adopted by any law enforcement agency must address situations in which police pursuits cross over into other jurisdictions. Law enforcement agencies which do not comply with the requirements of this provision are subject to the withholding of any state funding or state administered federal funding."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence.
2. Indictment.
3. Jury instruction.

1. Evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for felonious evasion because defendant, when a sheriff's deputy mentioned using a drug-detection dog to sniff around defendant's car while questioning defendant about drugs during a valid traffic stop, jumped into defendant's car and sped away at high speed, despite being shot with a taser, and fled on foot after defendant flipped the car. Williams v. State, 126 So. 3d 85 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Following evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of felony eluding: 1) a witness called police to report that a man was in her home and described him and his car; 2) an officer chased a car matching that description; 3) at the end of the chase, the driver exited the vehicle and ran into a house; 3) defendant was found hiding in the house; and 4) the witness who had called police identified defendant at trial as the intruder. Conner v. State, 138 So. 3d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), affirmed by

138 So. 3d 143, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 246 (Miss. 2014).

Evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction for felony fleeing, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-72(2), because a detective testified that after turning on the siren in an unmarked patrol car, defendant momentarily lost control of defendant's vehicle and nearly hit a utility pole, but the vehicle continued to evade the detective. Tugle v. State, 68 So. 3d 691 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 69 So. 3d 767, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2011), dismissed by 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64383 (N.D. Miss. May 6, 2013).

Defendant's conviction for felony eluding of a police officer, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-72(1) and (2), was supported by the evidence because officers testified that defendant drove through their roadblock without stopping and that they both ordered defendant to stop; the officers had to force defendant onto a dead-end street in order to make defendant stop the car. Betts v. State, 10 So. 3d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where an officer saw a vehicle speeding with an expired tag, he activated his blue lights and defendant led him on high speed chase until he crashed; the officer identified defendant as a former classmate. Defendant's conviction for fleeing a law enforcement officer in a motor vehicle, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-72, was not against the weight of the evidence; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial. Cole v. State, 8 So. 3d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

2. Indictment.

Underlying crime is not an essential element of fleeing a law officer in a motor vehicle; therefore, there was no need for an indictment to allege such. Bacon v. State, 950 So. 2d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In the context of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-72, a person's failure to obey a signal to stop a motor vehicle signifies that the person is continuing to operate the motor vehicle; therefore, where an indictment alleged that defendant, after being signaled to stop by an officer, continued to operate his vehicle with a reckless disregard for the safety of others, it was sufficient to allege a violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-72(2). Bacon v. State, 950 So. 2d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

3. Jury instruction.

Trial court did not err by giving a flight instruction because there was no independent reason or basis for defendant's flight and the evidence that defendant flipped a car and then fled on foot before law enforcement arrived was probative of both whether defendant was purposefully evading pursuing officers and whether, in doing so, defendant was driving recklessly. Because of the probative value of this evidence, neither the evidence, nor the related instruction violated Miss. R. Evid. 403. Williams v. State, 126 So. 3d 85 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

§ 97-9-73. Resisting or obstructing arrest; fleeing or eluding law enforcement officer in motor vehicle.

It shall be unlawful for any person to obstruct or resist by force, or violence, or threats, or in any other manner, his lawful arrest or the lawful arrest of another person by any state, local or federal law enforcement officer, and any person or persons so doing shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than six (6) months, or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Double jeopardy.

1. In general.

Thirteen-year-old juvenile was properly found by a youth court to be a delinquent child because the juvenile resisted arrest for disorderly conduct in that the juvenile refused to comply with a police officer's reasonable instructions to put the juvenile's hands on a patrol car, when the officer responded to a report that shots had been fired in the area from a car that matched the description of the car defendant was standing near, and in fact struggled with the officer and other responding officers. S.M.K.S. v. Youth Court of Union County, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 2 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 7, 2014).

Because, in attempting to prove assault, the State introduced evidence that defendant began swinging at an officer while he was being arrested, and it would have been impossible for defendant to have committed simple assault on a law enforcement officer without committing the crime of resisting arrest, the offense of resisting arrest was a lesser-included offense of the charged crime of simple assault, and the trial judge was authorized to grant the State's request for a resisting-arrest instruction. Edwards v. State, 124 So. 3d 105 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Even if a verdict finding defendant guilty of resisting arrest was inconsistent with a verdict of not guilty of simple assault on a police officer, that inconsistency was not grounds for reversal as the evidence was sufficient to sustain the resisting arrest conviction; an officer testified that after defendant struck another officer in the chest, a "fierce struggle" ensued while officers attempted to place defendant in handcuffs. Chambers v. State, 973 So. 2d 266 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 699 (Miss. 2007).

When a jury found defendant guilty of resisting arrest, but acquitted him of the charge of aggravated assault on a police officer, the verdict was not necessarily inconsistent because, among other things, the record showed that defendant struck an officer in the chest when the officer tried to arrest defendant. Chambers v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 108 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 27, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 973 So. 2d 266, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 692 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to investigate a suspicious white vehicle following a report of a vehicle theft, and then probable cause to detain its occupants for further questioning in light of their failure to respond and resisting arrest. Qualls v. State, 947 So. 2d 365 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault on a law enforcement officer, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2)(b) was not obtained in violation of the Double Jeopardy Clause as conviction on that charge required proof of at least one element not present in the resisting arrest charge, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-73, on which defendant had earlier been convicted. Powell v. State, 806 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. 2001).

Although the maximum sentence for a conviction of resisting arrest under this section is incarceration for six months, the court's imposition of the five-year probationary period was legal under a reading of § 99-19-25 and Wilson v. State, 735 So. 2d 290, 292 (Miss. 1999). Conner v. State, 750 So. 2d 1258 (Miss. 2000).

A defendant did not have the right to resist an unlawful arrest where the arresting officers were acting in good faith on an unlawful warrant erroneously issued by a judge. Murrell v. State, 655 So. 2d 881 (Miss. 1995).

The concept of "self-help" in resisting an arrest should be limited to those situations where the arrest is in fact illegal and the arrestee and arrestee have reason to know that it is, or where the arrest is accompanied by excessive force; there is no right to resist an arrest based upon good faith reliance on a duly issued arrest warrant where the arrestee has no reasonable basis to conclude that the warrant was issued in bad faith. Murrell v. State, 655 So. 2d 881 (Miss. 1995).

In a prosecution for simple assault upon a law enforcement officer, the trial court erred in failing to give an instruction on the lesser included offense of resisting arrest where a reasonable fact-finder could have concluded, based on the evidence presented, that the defendant resisted arrest, but had a reasonable doubt as to whether he "injured" the officer within the meaning of § 97-3-7. Murrell v. State, 655 So. 2d 881 (Miss. 1995).

2. Double jeopardy.

Defendant was not subject to double jeopardy, even though defendant was issued a citation for resisting arrest and was later convicted of simple assault on a law enforcement officer, where a clear reading of the statutes established that the two offenses contained an element that was lacking from the other. Roncali v. State, 980 So. 2d 959 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

All law enforcement officers of State and its political subdivisions are embraced within generic term “state law enforcement officers” contained in this section. Ditto, March 15, 1994, A.G. Op. #94-0088.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Although an arrestee was found not guilty of violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-75 because a state environmental quality department letter that a deputy sheriff attempted to serve on the arrestee did not qualify as “process” for purposes of § 97-9-75, the deputy was entitled to qualified immunity in the arrestee’s 42 U.S.C.S.

§ 1983 false arrest suit, as the deputy reasonably relied on the advice of the sheriff’s department’s attorney that the letter constituted process. Brassell v. Turner, 468 F. Supp. 2d 854 (S.D. Miss. 2006).

Where an officer made an arrest for a misdemeanor not committed in his presence and without having a warrant in his possession, the charge that the defendant resisted arrest cannot stand for he had a right to resist in a reasonable manner the unlawful arrest. Smith v. State, 208 So. 2d 746 (Miss. 1968).

Where two officers went upon the premises of the defendant without a search warrant and purchased intoxicating liquor, this evidence was not obtained by illegal search and was not excludable on the ground of unlawful search and seizure because no search was involved. Peebles v. State, 57 So. 2d 263 (Miss. 1952).

An owner who uses reasonable force in resisting an officer who is attempting to search the premises without a valid warrant is not guilty of resisting an officer attempting to execute legal writ of process in violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2293]. Pettis v. State, 209 Miss. 726, 48 So. 2d 355 (1950).

Where the sheriff and deputy sheriff were unlawful in arresting a person without a warrant for an alleged misdemeanor not committed in their presence and also were unlawful in invading the home of the owner, the acts of the owner in resisting entry were not unlawful. Pettis v. State, 209 Miss. 726, 48 So. 2d 355 (1950).

Owner may use reasonable force to resist officer attempting to search premises without valid warrant. Deaton v. State, 137 Miss. 164, 102 So. 175 (1924).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Whether or not employer who refuses process server access to employee would be guilty of misdemeanor depends on particular facts of each case; deputy is required by law to serve civil summons but is not, absent lawful court order to contrary, required to serve such summons at individual's place of employment. Smith, Sept. 2, 1992, A.G. Op. #92-0571.

No authority is known that exempts school personnel from this provision. Sherrell, Feb. 13, 2004, A.G. Op. 04-0047.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Where a will has been executed in duplicate, the destruction by testator of that copy which he retains in his possession, with intent to revoke the will, creates a presumption that the testator intends thereby to revoke the will. Phinizee v. Alexander, 210 Miss. 196, 49 So. 2d 250 (1950).

Where there are two copies of a will, both in possession of deceased, the presumption of law would be that by the preservation of one duplicate entire the testator did not intend a revocation of these particular devises, otherwise he would have mutilated both duplicates. Phinizee v. Alexander, 210 Miss. 196, 49 So. 2d 250 (1950).

3. Counterfeit documents.

1.-2. [Reserved for future use.]

3. Counterfeit documents.

Defendant's former attorney's testimony that he received a fraudulent certificate of title and a bill of sale from defendant for the stolen vehicle did not violate the attorney-client privilege because when defendant provided the documents to his attorney, there was no expectation of confidentiality or privilege concerning the documents or the fact that defendant provided them. The documents defendant provided were to be presented to the State as discovery under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 9.04(c)(2), the trial court, and the jurors in his defense, and therefore no privilege existed under Miss. R. Evid. 502. In addition, because the documents were counterfeit, defendant committed a crime under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-125 (Rev. 2006); by involving his attorney, and any privilege or confidentiality was destroyed. Hayden v. State, 972 So. 2d 525 (Miss. 2007).

§ 97-9-127. Retaliation against a public servant or witness.

(1) A person commits the offense of retaliation if he intentionally or knowingly harms or threatens to harm another by any unlawful act in retaliation for anything lawfully done in the capacity of public servant, witness, prospective witness or informant.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

- 3. Indictment sufficient.
- 4. Weight of the evidence.
- 5. Jury instructions.

1.-2. [Reserved for future use.]

3. Indictment sufficient.

Indictment clearly contained the elements of the retaliation and sufficiently informed defendant of the charge against him because it charged that he unlawfully threatened a police officer by threatening to assault the officer; the act of threatening to harm a police officer in the future is unlawful. Young v. State, 119 So. 3d 309 (Miss. 2013).

4. Weight of the evidence.

Verdict finding defendant guilty of retaliation was not so contrary to the evidence that to let it stand would sanction an unconscionable injustice, and the evidence did not weigh heavily against the jury's verdict, because defendant threatened to harm an officer by threatening to assault the officer. Young v. State, 119 So. 3d 309 (Miss. 2013).

5. Jury instructions.

Trial court sufficiently instructed the jury on retaliation because its instruction clearly required the State to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did unlawfully threaten to harm the officer by threatening to assault and/or kill him. Young v. State, 119 So. 3d 309 (Miss. 2013).

§ 97-9-129. Sentencing.

(1) A person who has been convicted of any Class 1 felony under this article shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of not more than five (5) years or fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or both.

(2) A person who has been convicted of any Class 2 felony under this article shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of not more than two (2) years or fined not more than Three Thousand Dollars ($3,000.00), or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

“Wittingly,” as used in this statute, relates to the will or understanding, and means “knowingly” or “designedly.” Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 490 (1877).

An indictment must charge that the alteration was “wittingly” done; and if it fail to do so, but simply aver that it was done “willingly,” it is fatally defective; and the indictment must aver that the alteration was made with the intent to injure or benefit someone. Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 490 (1877).

Though, as a general rule, it be sufficient to charge a statutory offense in the words of the statute, yet this rule does not apply where there are, in the language of the statute, no sufficient words to define any offense. Jesse v. State, 28 Miss. 100 (1854); Sarah v. State, 28 Miss. 267 (1854); Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 490 (1877); Finch v. State, 64 Miss. 461, 1 So. 630 (1886).

Judge was publicly reprimanded because he had ex parte contact with defendant that he did not disclose to the prosecutor, dismissed defendant’s tickets without a hearing or notice to the prosecutor, and falsified court records by writing on the file that the ticketing officers were absent when defendant’s case was called for trial, when in fact they had been present in the courtroom. Miss. Comm’n on Judicial Performance v. Carver, 107 So. 3d 964 (Miss. 2013).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.

1. In general.

Because the State was not required to prove that the money given to a chief of police constituted bribe money, a reasonable jury could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant offered to pay money to the chief of police in an attempt to influence the chief's actions and as such bribed a public official in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-11. The evidence include testimony that after a burglary at juke joint, which was owned by defendant's brother and had illegal gaming machines, defendant told the chief that he would give him money if the chief warned defendant and his brother when the Mississippi Gaming Commission was coming; that the chief warned defendant; and that the chief later received money. Patton v. State, 987 So. 2d 1063 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Because an attorney entered a valid plea of guilty to charges of bribery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-11, pursuant to the requirements of Miss. R. Disc. St. B. 6, the attorney demonstrated evidence of unprofessional and unethical conduct evincing unfitness for the practice of law, which warranted immediate suspension, and while the plea might later be withdrawn, the court found that this provided the attorney no relief from the application of Rule 6; furthermore, the court had the power to render immediate sanctions for admitted felonies under the non-adjudication of guilt statutory procedure of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-15-26 and Miss. R. Disc. St. B. 6 without a hearing by a complaint tribunal. Miss. Bar v. Shelton, 890 So. 2d 827 (Miss. 2003).

Before a defendant can raise the defense of entrapment, he is required to show evidence of government inducement to commit the criminal act and a lack of predisposition to engage in the criminal act prior to contact with government agents; it is now possible for the defendant to deny one or more of the elements of the crime and still be entitled to an entrapment instruction. Hopson v. State, 625 So. 2d 395 (Miss. 1993).

Conduct of attorney in scheme to bribe state official is unlawful under state statute proscribing offers of inducements to influence public officials' actions in accomplishment of official acts. Mississippi State Bar v. Young, 509 So. 2d 210 (Miss. 1987), petition dismissed, 523 So. 2d 323 (Miss. 1988).

Defendant is estopped from denying his criminal intent to commit bribery because at trial he invoked entrapment defense, and by invoking that defense it was necessarily assumed that act charged as offense was committed. Howard v. State, 507 So. 2d 58 (Miss. 1987), overruled on other grounds, Hopson v. State, 625 So. 2d 395 (Miss. 1993).

To constitute a violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2027] it is not necessary that the bribery should be completed, or that there be a mutual intent on the part of the offerer and the person to whom the offer is made, or that there should have been an actual tender of the bribe. McLemore v. State, 241 Miss. 664, 125 So. 2d 86 (1960), error overruled, 241 Miss. 676, 126 So. 2d 236 (1961), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 70, 82 S. Ct. 197, 7 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1961).

The offense may be committed by making an offer communicated through an intermediary. McLemore v. State, 241 Miss. 664, 125 So. 2d 86 (1960), error overruled, 241 Miss. 676, 126 So. 2d 236

The matter with respect to which it is sought to influence a district attorney may be a charge which he is to present to a grand jury. McLemore v. State, 241 Miss. 664, 125 So. 2d 86 (1960), error overruled, 241 Miss. 676, 126 So. 2d 236 (1961), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 70, 82 S. Ct. 197, 7 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1961).

2. Indictment.

An indictment need not aver that the offer was made corruptly or with a corrupt intent. McLemore v. State, 241 Miss. 664, 125 So. 2d 86 (1960), error overruled, 241 Miss. 676, 126 So. 2d 236 (1961), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 70, 82 S. Ct. 197, 7 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1961).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. Evidence.

1. In general.

Earlier case is overruled inasmuch as the distinction drawn by the majority was an unnecessary one, and one which has made the embezzlement statute, for all practical purposes, a dead letter. Gerrard v. State, 619 So. 2d 212 (Miss. 1993).

If a state official uses a power given to him by law to obtain monies wrongfully, it is the corruption of power that causes those monies to be obtained "by virtue of office" since the state official would never have had the means to misallocate funds had he not held an office which conferred that power upon him. Gerrard v. State, 619 So. 2d 212 (Miss. 1993).

In Mississippi, embezzlement is wrongful conversion of property lawfully possessed by person charged, and where defendant lawfully came into possession of money orders/guilty pleas by "virtue of his office" and converted such to his own use, he could be charged with and convicted of embezzlement. Argument that money came into possession of defendant by "color of office" and not by "virtue of his office" so that any breach of trust occurred only between defendant and makers of money orders, and not between defendant and state and county, was unsound where funds converted represented payment of fines, and defendant was justice court judge. Lambert v. State, 518 So. 2d 621 (Miss. 1987).

County tax collector's guilty plea in state court to crimes of "willful neglect of duties" and "embezzlement" (§§ 97-11-25 through 97-11-31 and § 97-11-37) established that he committed active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, which prevented tax collector from recovering on county's fidelity insurance policy, where policy did not cover losses due to "active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud", such that insurance company owed tax collector no funds that county could obtain by garnishment. Mississippi v. Richardson, 817 F.2d 1203 (5th Cir. 1987).

A particular statute, § 9-11-19, concerning the duties of a justice to account for fines and making its violation a misdemeanor, does not control the general statute, this section, concerning unlawful conversion of public funds by a state officer and making its violation a felony, since there are substantive differences between the two, violation of the method of performing a duty on the one hand as opposed to unlawful conversion of public funds on the other. Hannah v. State, 336 So. 2d 1317 (Miss. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1101, 97 S. Ct. 1125, 51 L. Ed. 2d 551 (1977).

The phrase, "by virtue of his office," as appearing in Code 1942 § 2120 [Code 1972 § 97-11-25], means that the official charged with embezzlement has the legal right to receive the property or money he is accused of embezzling. Interior Contractors v. Western Waterproofing Co., 233 So. 2d 829 (Miss. 1970).

Under Code 1942 § 2120 [Code 1972 § 97-11-25], an official is not guilty of embezzlement where the money or property which he is accused of embezzling is received under the color of his office. Interior Contractors v. Western Waterproofing Co., 233 So. 2d 829 (Miss. 1970).

Single member may embezzle property coming into possession of board. State v. Yeates, 140 Miss. 224, 105 So. 498 (1925).

Property bought for road purpose is in possession of county board of supervisors. State v. Yeates, 140 Miss. 224, 105 So. 498 (1925).

Embezzlement is a statutory and not a common-law crime. McInnis v. State, 97 Miss. 280, 52 So. 634 (1910).

This section [Code 1942, § 2120] creates but one offense of misappropriating funds and a tax collector convicted of embezzlement of funds may not be prosecuted for converting such funds to his own use. McInnis v. State, 97 Miss. 280, 52 So. 634 (1910).

The section [Code 1942, § 2120] does not apply to a refusal by an executor to pay a debt due from the estate on its reduction to judgment. State v. Pannell, 34 So. 388 (Miss. 1903).

This section [Code 1942, § 2120] is prospective only, and therefore constitutional. State v. Gillis, 75 Miss. 331, 24 So. 25 (1898).

Where the conversion to one's use, and failure to pay over, conjointly, constitute the crime under the old law (§ 2787 of the Code of 1880), and by the new law (§ 1063 of the Code of 1892), the conversion is one crime and the failure to pay over another, and the conversion is before the Code of 1892 became operative, and the failure to pay over occurred afterwards, the case is not within the saving of § 5 of the Code of 1892, that section relating only to completed offenses. State v. Gillis, 75 Miss. 331, 24 So. 25 (1898).

If in such a case the indictment charges the defendant with having the money after the new law became operative, and with the failure to pay over thereafter, it is good, although the money was received before. The new law is not ex post facto as applied to a case where the money was in defendant's possession after the new law became operative, and he thereafter failed to pay it over. State v. Gillis, 75 Miss. 331, 24 So. 25 (1898).

2. Indictment.

Since a bond received by a justice of the peace would be received under color of his office rather than by virtue of his office, an indictment charging the officer with embezzlement of the bond would be defective under Code 1942 § 2120 [Code 1972 § 97-11-25]. Barlow v. State, 233 So. 2d 829 (Miss. 1970).

Indictment charging embezzlement by schoolteacher of money belonging to trustees of school without charging names of the trustees or alleging that their names were unknown, is defective. Voss v. State, 208 Miss. 303, 44 So. 2d 402 (1950).

Under an indictment for failing to account for and pay over to his superior certain license fees collected by one designated as chief clerk, it is material as to who actually made away with the money where numerous field men had equal access to the cigar box in which duplicate permits, cash and checks were kept, and where neither statute nor departmental regulations prescribed the duties or modus operandi of the chief clerk. Murphree v. State, 201 Miss. 34, 28 So. 2d 238 (1946).

Indictment for embezzlement not required to charge that conversion of public funds was made with intent to cheat and defraud. Sanders v. State, 141 Miss. 289, 105 So. 523 (1925).

Indictment for embezzlement of public funds need not set out extrinsic facts constituting offense. Sanders v. State, 141 Miss. 289, 105 So. 523 (1925).

Indictment charging accused had possession, by virtue of office, of money to an amount named in the indictment, property of the county, was sufficient without setting out the particular funds embezzled. Sanders v. State, 141 Miss. 289, 105 So. 523 (1925).

Failure to charge that conversion of funds involved was done with intent to cheat and defraud held not error. Sanders v. State, 141 Miss. 289, 105 So. 523 (1925).

Embezzlement held sufficiently charged against member of board of supervisors. State v. Yeates, 140 Miss. 224, 105 So. 498 (1925).

Indictment against member of county board of supervisors not bad in describing him as supervisor. State v. Yeates, 140 Miss. 224, 105 So. 498 (1925).

Indictment for embezzlement by chan-cery clerk held not subject to demurrer. State v. Murphy, 124 Miss. 440, 86 So. 868 (1921).

Conflicting averments do not establish fiduciary relationship to county where such does not exist in fact. State v. Jones, 102 Miss. 89, 58 So. 782 (1912).

3. Evidence.

There was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for embezzlement under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-25 because defendant, as a mayor of a town, did not have permission to take cabinets inside of a city building, and the evidence showed that the cabinets in question were city property instead of the property of a former tenant; a mistake of fact defense was rejected because the evidence showed that defendant was put on notice that the cabinets were city property. Logan v. State, 951 So. 2d 630 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Lower court did not err when it allowed state to cross-examine defendant about prior improper actions concerning "ticket fixing", despite allegation that such cross-examination amounted to questioning that was meant solely to bring out acts of misconduct reflecting on defendant's character and prejudice jury, where defendant had asserted throughout trial that state troopers had requested that citations in question be dismissed and numerous witnesses, including defendant, testified at various times concerning manner in which traffic citations could be dismissed. Lambert v. State, 518 So. 2d 621 (Miss. 1987).

In a prosecution of a justice of the peace under this section evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of guilty where there were numerous incidents in which the defendant had received a certain amount in payment of a fine and had remitted a lesser amount to the county. Hannah v. State, 336 So. 2d 1317 (Miss. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1101, 97 S. Ct. 1125, 51 L. Ed. 2d 551 (1977).

In a prosecution for embezzlement where defendant converted accounts due to another to his own use, testimony of a witness who had never been in the office and who knew no one who worked in the office and who had never seen the defendant until the day of trial that he had made phone calls to defendant's office and had been told that money had been collected was not admissible in evidence. Acosta v. State, 222 Miss. 426, 76 So. 2d 211 (1954).

The state treasurer, auditor of public accounts, assessors and collectors of taxes, and all other state and county officers, and officers of cities, towns and villages, shall make and keep in their offices, subject to inspection at all times, an accurate entry of each and every sum of public money, securities, stocks, or other public money whatever, by them received, transferred, or disbursed; and if any of said officers, either municipal, county or state, or a clerk, agent or employee of such officers, shall willfully and fraudulently make any false entry therein or make any certificate or endorsement of any warrant on the treasury that the same is genuine, when the same is in fact not a genuine warrant, or shall loan any portion of the public moneys, securities, stocks, or other public property intrusted to him, for any purpose whatever, or shall, by willful act or omission of duty whatever, defraud, or attempt to defraud, the state, or any county, city, town or village, of any moneys, security, or property, he shall, on conviction thereof, be guilty of embezzlement, and fined not less than double the amount or value of the moneys, security, stock or other property so embezzled, or committed to the department of corrections for not more than ten (10) years, or both.

1. In general.

County tax collector's guilty plea in state court to crimes of “willful neglect of duties” and “embezzlement” (§§ 97-11-25 through 97-11-31 and § 97-11-37) established that he committed active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, which prevented tax collector from recovering on county's fidelity insurance policy, where policy did not cover losses due to "active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud", such that insurance company owed tax collector no funds that county could obtain by garnishment. Mississippi v. Richardson, 817 F.2d 1203 (5th Cir. 1987).

Chancery clerk who uses county funds, rather than chancery clerk monies, to pay chancery clerk employee's and matching employer contributions to state retirement fund is guilty of embezzlement. Schilling v. State, 473 So. 2d 975 (Miss. 1985).

This section [Code 1942, § 2122] was inapplicable, or, at least not exclusively applicable, to an indictment, which improperly failed to specify the code section under which it was drawn, charging that a county superintendent of education, aided and abetted by two others who were not public officials, issued a false warrant knowing at the time no money was owing to the payee, and converted the proceeds thereof to his own use, thereby embezzling the school money of the county. Autry v. State, 230 Miss. 421, 92 So. 2d 856 (1957).

In prosecution against member of county board of supervisors for attempting to defraud county by inducing it to pay money to named persons to whom member knew county was not indebted, refusal to require state to elect to proceed only on inducement as to one of named persons held not error. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

In prosecution against member of county board of supervisors for attempting to defraud county by submitting third persons' claims for 1,899 loads of gravel sold county, with knowledge that such amount of gravel was not sold to county, district attorney's argument that no one testified to hauling 1,899 loads held not error as comment on member's failure to testify. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

2. Indictment.

It was error to dismiss defendant's embezzlement indictment under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-29 because defendant had eventually paid for the pistol he was claimed to have embezzled since: (1) the sufficiency of evidence for an indictment could not be challenged before the trial on the merits after the State had presented its case; (2) the State had a right to appeal under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-103(a), and dismissal and remand for retrial were proper; (3) § 99-35-103(b) did not apply because neither side sought a bench trial nor stipulated to the facts, there was no risk that the trial judge would decide defendant's guilt at the hearing, and without risk of a determination of guilt, jeopardy did not attach; and (4) neither an appeal nor further prosecution constituted double jeopardy. State v. Parkman, 106 So. 3d 378 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012), writ of certiorari denied by 105 So. 3d 326, 2013 Miss. LEXIS 39 (Miss. 2013).

Indictment against member of county board of supervisors for attempting to defraud county by inducing it to pay money to named persons to whom member knew county was not indebted held not to charge more than one offense, notwithstanding that money was to be paid to more than one person. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

3. Evidence.

The crime of attempted embezzlement is not established where the evidence fails to show an overt act on the part of the defendant to commit the crime charged before he abandoned his alleged purpose. Kern v. Noble, 206 So. 2d 200 (Miss. 1968).

In prosecution against member of county board of supervisors for attempting to defraud county by inducing it to pay money to sellers of gravel whom member knew county was not indebted to in amount indicated on "pay roll" submitted by him, admission of second pay roll omitting some of names included on first pay roll held not error, since second pay roll was admission by member that first pay roll was not correct. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

Member of county board of supervisors who submitted gravel claims of third persons in greater amount than was actually owing thereon would be presumed, in absence of evidence to contrary, to have intended to thereby defraud county, as respects whether member was guilty of embezzlement under statute. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

4. Questions for jury.

Whether member of county board of supervisors had knowledge that gravel claims of third persons submitted by him were not owing in amounts submitted by him, so as to be guilty of embezzlement under statute, held for jury. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

5. Instructions.

In prosecution against member of county board of supervisors for wilfully attempting to defraud county, instruction that jury could presume that member of county board of supervisors filed third persons' gravel claims against county in greater amounts than were due thereon, with intent to defraud county, held not error. Heard v. State, 177 Miss. 661, 171 So. 775 (1937).

5. Miscellaneous.

1. In general.

This section [Code 1942, § 2123] was applicable to an offense charged in an indictment, which improperly failed to specify the code section under which it was drawn, charging that the county superintendent of education aided and abetted by two others who were not public officials, issued a false warrant knowing at the time no money was owing to the payee, and converted the proceeds thereof to his own use, thereby embezzling school money of the county. Autry v. State, 230 Miss. 421, 92 So. 2d 856 (1957).

Code 1942, § 2437, was not applicable in prosecution of a supervisor on a charge of employing a relative to work on the public roads and who instead employed him on his private farm and paid him out of public moneys, and was prosecuted under Code 1942, § 2123. Blakeney v. State, 228 Miss. 162, 87 So. 2d 472 (1956).

Fraud involves a breach of duty, trust and confidence, and includes all acts, omissions or concealments by which another is injured, or an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken. Smith v. State, 107 Miss. 574, 65 So. 498 (1914).

The section [Code 1942, § 2123] is a general law, covering all cases of fraud and embezzlement not specially provided for in the other sections. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

A circuit clerk who issued a false and fraudulent witness pay-certificate, on its face good in substance, but defective in form, is guilty under the section [Code 1942, § 2123]. Bracey v. State, 64 Miss. 17, 8 So. 163 (1886).

2. Indictment.

Indictment was not defective because it did not contain the type of personal use defendant engaged in that led to his indictment for embezzlement and fraud because the indictment sufficiently stated the essential elements of the crime and the acts which constituted the embezzlement or fraud. Terry v. State, 26 So. 3d 378 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 24 So. 3d 1038, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 34 (Miss. 2010).

In an indictment charging a county official and county employee with knowingly and feloniously defrauding the county under this section, the term "fraud committed in a public office" was not so vague as to fail constitutional muster since the indictment gave the statute under which the defendants were charged and followed its language, the language of the indictment was plain, and the defendants were therefore fully informed of the nature of the offense. Cumbest v. State, 456 So. 2d 209 (Miss. 1984).

An indictment charging that defendant mayor's hotel bill was paid by a third party, and consequently this was not out of pocket expense to which he was entitled to reimbursement by the city, and that by making a claim for reimbursement and accepting the money knowing it was not due him, he did cheat and defraud the city of public funds, was sufficient under this section [Code 1942 § 2123]. State v. Grady, 281 So. 2d 678 (Miss. 1973).

An indictment charging a county supervisor with the embezzlement of tractor parts was properly subject to demurrer where ownership of the property taken was not shown, the property taken was not described in language sufficiently definite as to identify it, and the value of the various parts was not alleged. Sisk v. State, 260 So. 2d 485 (Miss. 1972).

An indictment charging that accused while acting as supervisor employed a distant relative to work upon public roads at the rate of $5 a day and ordered the relative to perform 7 ½ days work on his private farm and paid his relative by means of regular road and bridge fund warrants of said district, was sufficient under this section [Code 1942, § 2123]. Blakeney v. State, 228 Miss. 162, 87 So. 2d 472 (1956).

An indictment charging that a trustee of the state penitentiary, fraudulently, etc., caused to be bought and participated in buying an automobile from himself and a third party held sufficient. Smith v. State, 107 Miss. 574, 65 So. 498 (1914).

3. Evidence.

Evidence of defendant's intent to commit fraud in public office was sufficient to convict, as it was shown that defendant told a city mechanic and the owner of a supply shop different stories regarding defendant's need for auto parts and, subsequently, asked the supply shop owner to mislead investigators. Johnson v. State, 831 So. 2d 1171 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where supervisor who had employed a relative to work on public roads who instead worked on his private farm and was paid out of public moneys, and supervisor was convicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2123] and after the trial an unexplained receipt which had been signed by the relative for the sum of $24 for eight days labor was found, the supervisor should have been given a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Blakeney v. State, 228 Miss. 162, 87 So. 2d 472 (1956).

Under an indictment for failing to account for and pay over to his superior certain license fees collected by one designated as chief clerk, it is material as to who actually made away with the money where numerous field men had equal access to the cigar box in which duplicate permits, cash and checks were kept, and where neither statute nor departmental regulations prescribed the duties or modus operandi of the chief clerk. Murphree v. State, 201 Miss. 34, 28 So. 2d 238 (1946).

When the books of account, required to be kept by the auditor and the treasurer, agreed in showing a shortage in the accounts of the latter, the burden is on the latter to show errors in his account if he rely upon that as a defense. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

Though, an indictment for embezzlement, which charges an officer with failure to pay over money to his successor, allege that the money was in his hands when his successor qualified, this allegation is immaterial and need not be proved. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

To charge an officer with the receipt of money as shown by his books and report, it is not necessary for the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he made the entries, or, caused them to be made. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

In prosecution against a public officer who is required to keep correct accounts, where a balance due the state is shown by his own books, proof that the books show such balance, together with the failure to pay, unexplained, will alone warrant a conviction. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

In a prosecution for embezzlement against the state treasurer it is sufficient if the testimony proves that the defendant has made way with the money or gotten rid of it wilfully and fraudulently in any manner not allowed by law; and if all the evidence furnished no reasonable explanation of what became of the money and raises no reasonable doubt of his guilt the jury should convict. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

4. Instructions.

Where the defendant, and the county superintendent of education, were charged in the indictment with embezzlement of county school funds, a warrant for $1,629.00, an instruction which by its language relieved the prosecution of the burden of proving any particular act of embezzlement was erroneous. Mills v. State, 231 Miss. 687, 97 So. 2d 517 (1957).

An instruction that if they believed that the accused and the county school superintendent were guilty of embezzling school funds, the jury might find the accused guilty regardless of whether he received any or all the money, was prejudicially erroneous, where there was no evidence upon which it could have been predicated, and since the accused had admitted that he had received the money, and there was no evidence that the county school superintendent received any part of the funds, the instruction left to the jury to conjecture that defendant might have been the instrumentality through which the county superintendent of education received all or some part of the allegedly embezzled funds, without there being any evidence to support such conjecture. Mills v. State, 231 Miss. 687, 97 So. 2d 517 (1957).

Instruction held correct. Hemingway v. State, 68 Miss. 371, 8 So. 317 (1890).

5. Miscellaneous.

Earlier case is overruled inasmuch as the distinction drawn by the majority was an unnecessary one, and one which has made the embezzlement statute, for all practical purposes, a dead letter. Gerrard v. State, 619 So. 2d 212 (Miss. 1993).

If a state official uses a power given to him by law to obtain monies wrongfully, it is the corruption of power that causes those monies to be obtained "by virtue of office" since the state official would never have had the means to misallocate funds had he not held an office which conferred that power upon him. Gerrard v. State, 619 So. 2d 212 (Miss. 1993).

County tax collector's guilty plea in state court to crimes of "willful neglect of duties" and "embezzlement" (§§ 97-11-25 through 97-11-31 and § 97-11-37) established that he committed active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, which prevented tax collector from recovering on county's fidelity insurance policy, where policy did not cover losses due to "active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud", such that insurance company owed tax collector no funds that county could obtain by garnishment. Mississippi v. Richardson, 817 F.2d 1203 (5th Cir. 1987).

Where defendant in a prosecution for embezzlement pleaded guilty in 1978 to two of ten indictments, the trial court erred in sentencing him to two concurrent terms of three years in prison, suspended, and $10,000 in fines since this section provides for either fine or imprisonment, but not both. Salter v. State, 387 So. 2d 81 (Miss. 1980).

In an embezzlement prosecution, it was error for the special prosecutor to advise the jury as to what the district attorney had testified to, out of jury's presence, in regard to defendant's statement regarding the offense charged, but in view of defendant's failure to preserve the point by moving to strike from the record and asking that the jury be instructed to disregard it, or to secure a ruling to his objection to the special prosecutor's statement, the defendant was not in a position to complain as to the error upon an appeal from a conviction. O'Harrell v. State, 97 So. 2d 517 (Miss. 1957).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.

1. In general.

Under § 1081, Code 1892, the tax collector is not entitled to exact from the purchaser of land at a tax sale the prepayment of fees given by the act of 1898 (laws of 1898 p. 52) for services to be rendered for two years thereafter. Baker v. Cox, 79 Miss. 306, 30 So. 641 (1901).

Under § 1081 Code of 1892, the tax collector is not entitled to exact from the purchaser of land at a tax sale the prepayment of the fees given by the act of 1898 (laws of 1898 p. 52) for services to be rendered nearly two years thereafter in notifying delinquents that the tax sale is about to become absolute. Baker v. Cox, 79 Miss. 306, 30 So. 641 (1901).

2. Indictment.

When defendant has been tried for murder and convicted of lesser offense of manslaughter, subsequent indictment for separate felony of shooting into occupied building based on same criminal episode is barred on double jeopardy grounds. Davis v. Herring, 800 F.2d 513 (5th Cir. 1986).

Extortion, being a common-law offense, may be charged according to the statute or the common law, and by the latter it is sufficient to charge that it was "unlawfully, corruptly, deceitfully, extorsively and by color of office" done, without using the word "knowingly." State v. Jones, 71 Miss. 872, 15 So. 237 (1894).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

County tax collector's guilty plea in state court to crimes of "willful neglect of duties" and "embezzlement" (§§ 97-11-25 through 97-11-31 and § 97-11-37) established that he committed active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, which prevented tax collector from recovering on county's fidelity insurance policy, where policy did not cover losses due to "active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud", such that insurance company owed tax collector no funds that county could obtain by garnishment. Mississippi v. Richardson, 817 F.2d 1203 (5th Cir. 1987).

Where county taxpayer pleads guilty to crimes of embezzlement and willfully neglecting his duties, it is established that tax collector committed active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, such that public officials liability insurance policy which excluded coverage for losses due to active or deliberate dishonesty or fraud, did not cover county's losses suffered by reason of tax collector's acts. Mississippi v. Richardson, 817 F.2d 1203 (5th Cir. 1987).

Where the mayor and aldermen of a city failed to give notice of an election to determine the question whether there should be an increase in taxation for a specified year, they were subject to indictment. State v. Glennen, 93 Miss. 836, 47 So. 550 (1908).

(v) Any entity created by or under the laws of the State of Mississippi or by executive order of the Governor of the State of Mississippi and which expends public funds.

No person shall directly or indirectly offer, promise, give or agree to give to any public official or his spouse any money, property, or other tangible or intangible thing of value as an inducement or incentive for (a) the awarding or refusal to award a contract by any of the entities referred to in subsections (i) through (v) of subsection 2-b of this section; (b) the purchase, sale or lease of property by any of the entities referred to in subsections (i) through (v) of subsection 2-b of this section; or (c) the accomplishment of any official act or purpose involving public funds or public trust.

Any person who violates the terms of this section shall be guilty of a felony and shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten (10) years, or be fined not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), or both; and in addition such person and the firm, corporation, partnership, association or other type of business entity which he represents shall be barred for a period of five (5) years from the date of conviction from doing business with the State of Mississippi or any political subdivision thereof or any other public entity referred to in this section.

No public official shall directly or indirectly accept, receive, offer to receive or agree to receive any gift, offer, or promise of any money, property or other tangible or intangible thing of value as an inducement or incentive for (a) the awarding or refusal to award a contract by any of the entities referred to in subsections (i) through (v) of subsection 2-b of this section; (b) the purchase, sale or lease of property by any of the entities referred to in subsections (i) through (v) of subsection 2-b of this section; or (c) the accomplishment of any official act or purpose involving public funds or public trust.

Any public official who violates the terms of this section or whose spouse does so with his knowledge and consent, shall be guilty of a felony and shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten (10) years, or be fined not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), or both; and in addition, upon conviction such public official shall forfeit his office, if any he hold, and be forever disqualified from holding any public office, trust, appointment or employment with the State of Mississippi or any political subdivision thereof or with any other public entity referred to in this section.

Each violation of the provisions of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Official act element.

In defendant's trial on charges of violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-53, inducement to influence a public official, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the judgment or for a new trial because a videotaped meeting clearly showed that defendant had accepted payment of $ 5,000, and acknowledged having previously accepted an additional $ 2,500, in return for his aid in securing other city council member's approval of a property owner's construction project. Also the "official act" element of the offense was satisfied because in trying to secure the council's approval, defendant, as an official act, called a city council meeting and presented the property owners' documents to show the progress made on the project. Edmonson v. State, 906 So. 2d 73 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

who wish to participate in cash drawing participate in election and where scheme expressly disclaims attempt to influence direction of vote. Naron v. Prestage, 469 So. 2d 83 (Miss. 1985).

1. In general.

Donation by the general manager of $1,200 of funds of an association to candidates for public office was in complete violation of the statutory prohibition, and the corporation was entitled to recover that amount plus interest from the date of contribution. Capital Elec. Power Ass'n v. Phillips, 240 So. 2d 133 (Miss. 1970).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

This section and § 23-15-807 are specifically directed to candidates seeking public office in which the general electorate will vote. Therefore, these code sections would not apply to elections within the House of Representatives; thus, corporate contributions to a candidate seeking election as Speaker of the House of Representatives would not be limited and would not be required to be reported. Ford, October 4, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0456.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

This section applies to primary elections, as well as to general and special elections. Fanning v. State, 497 So. 2d 70 (Miss. 1986).

An indictment charging an election officer with reporting a false account of the votes received by candidates at a primary election charged a felony covered by this section, and the state was not required to proceed on a misdemeanor count under former § 23-5-161. Fanning v. State, 497 So. 2d 70 (Miss. 1986).

Sentence was neither excessive nor beyond the court's authority which required the defendant, who was convicted of a violation of this section, to serve 30 days in the county jail, perform 60 days of community work, pay costs of special election, and pay costs of trial, as conditions for the suspension of a one year sentence and 2 years of probation. *Fanning v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Sufficiency of evidence.

There was sufficient evidence with which to convict defendant of commercial burglary where a police officer saw a black man with the same build as defendant, who, like defendant, was driving a Lexus, wearing a black outfit (including a black cap), and carrying a black jacket. The man broke and entered a store at night and stole change from the register tills, and defendant was found shortly after the store break-in with more than $ 25 in change. Roche v. State, 913 So. 2d 306 (Miss. 2005).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

That part of this section which reads “unless permission is granted within the county wherein Highway 15 and I20 intersect” is unconstitutional and should be stricken from the act; the remaining portion of the statute is constitutional. The 1974 amendment to the statute limits the violation to streets, public highways and railroads within the boundaries of hunting clubs in the state, and the law previous thereto making it a violation to hunt or race on, or shoot on or across any street or public highway in the state of Mississippi has been completely changed. Quinn v. Branning, 404 So. 2d 1018 (Miss. 1981).

Conviction of shooting in public highways will not be reversed for defects in affidavit, amendable on demurrer. Evans v. State, 92 Miss. 34, 45 So. 706 (1908).

An indictment is good which charges that the defendant shot on a public highway. Woods v. State, 67 Miss. 575, 7 So. 495 (1890).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Section 49-7-49 should not be used to replace subsection (1) of this section during closed seasons on deer and turkey; Section 49-7-49 would apply to this section in cases whereby suspect was in possession of dead bodies of wild birds or wild animals while on public highways, at which time it would be prima facie evidence that such person was hunting. Breland, June 9, 1993, A.G. Op. #93-0376.

The prerequisites required by Code 1892, § 3892 (Code 1906, § 4400; Hemingway's Code 1927, § 8340), are essential to a valid petition, and a road laid out without them is no road and an obstruction to it no crime under this section [Code 1942, § 2210]. State v. Morgan, 79 Miss. 659, 31 So. 338 (1902).

This section [Code 1942, § 2210] has no reference to a street in a municipality (Magers v. Okolona, H. & C. C. R. Co. 174 M 860, 165 So 416) even though the street had, prior to incorporation, been a public road. Blocker v. State, 72 Miss. 720, 18 So. 388 (1895).

This section [Code 1942, § 2210] applies where the obstruction is caused by positive use of physical means; mere omission to repair a bridge is not within the section. Vicksburg & M.R.R. v. State, 64 Miss. 5, 8 So. 128 (1886).

It shall be unlawful and a misdemeanor for any person, firm, corporation, association or organization to push, fell or cut trees, in excess of six (6) inches in diameter, into a running stream, or deposit or leave in a running stream, trees, in excess of six (6) inches in diameter, logs in excess of six (6) inches in diameter or tree tops, without removing the same immediately, in such cases where such will materially impede the flow of or navigation upon such running stream.

Any violation of this section shall be punishable by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars ($25.00) and not more than two hundred dollars ($200.00).

Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to the rafting and movement of logs in a running stream in the customary manner and for commercial purposes. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

The evidence was sufficient to support the chancellor's holding that defendants' logging operation, which had left treetops in excess of six inches in diameter in a drainage canal, was the sole proximate cause of plaintiff's inadequate drainage, in violation of this section, where, notwithstanding the natural erosion of the drainage canal which continued during the years in question and the activity of beavers, who had been in the area long before the timber cutters, the heaviest rainfall in the two years in question had occurred approximately one month prior to planting season, and there would normally have been plenty of time for the waters to drain prior to planting. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Malice as element of crime.
3. Indictment.
4. Sufficiency of indictment.
5. —Under former statutes.
6. Corpus delicti.
7. Evidence.
8. Miscellaneous.
9. Lesser-included offense.

1. In general.

Sentence to 20 years imprisonment without reduction, revocation or parole imposed upon defendant convicted of arson and of being habitual criminal is not unconstitutionally excessive where arson conviction is based upon defendant's having set occupied house on fire at both front and back doors and where defendant has prior convictions for burglary and uttering forgery. Jenkins v. State, 483 So. 2d 1330 (Miss. 1986).

It is unlawful to burn the dwelling house of another, even though title thereto may be involved in litigation, and it is not necessary that the state litigate the question of disputed ownership with the defendant in the trial of the criminal case when the state is otherwise able to sufficiently identify the property in the indictment and under the proof in such manner as to clearly enable the accused to invoke such indictment and the record of his conviction in support of a plea of former jeopardy if subsequently charged with the same unlawful act. Jenkins v. State, 197 Miss. 346, 19 So. 2d 921 (1944).

House joined to a dwelling by an unenclosed gallery and roof was a part of the dwelling house within this section [Code 1942, § 2006]. Spears v. State, 92 Miss. 613, 46 So. 166 (1908).

2. Malice as element of crime.

Evidence was sufficient to show malice where the state's expert testified that his opinion was that the fire was set intentionally since, inter alia, the fire had two separate, non-connecting points of origin. Barnes v. State, 721 So. 2d 1130 (Ct. App. 1998).

Where indictment for arson was wholly void for failing to allege burning was malicious, validity could be challenged for first time on appeal from overruling of motion to set aside judgment. Reed v. State, 171 Miss. 65, 156 So. 650 (1934).

An indictment charging, in the language of the statute, the wilful burning of goods and that it was done feloniously but failing to allege defendant's malice, is fatally defective. Maxwell v. State, 68 Miss. 339, 8 So. 546 (1891).

Malice is a necessary ingredient in the crime of arson at common law, and the indictment must charge that it was done "maliciously." Jesse v. State, 28 Miss. 100 (1854).

3. Indictment.

Felony murder as a capital crime by definition requires that there be two felonies, the homicide being the intentional or unintentional product of the other felony. The elements set out in the indictment against defendant only charged one felony, that defendant killed the victim by setting the victim on fire and that act was not a capital offense; in order for defendant to have been charged with capital murder, defendant must have been charged with arson by setting the house trailer or sofa on fire and that defendant killed the victim (defendant's husband) as a result. Buckley v. State, 875 So. 2d 1110 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Indictment charging that defendant burned a house and designated personality therein, charged two offenses. State v. Freeman, 90 Miss. 315, 43 So. 289 (1907).

4. Sufficiency of indictment.

An indictment charging arson in the disjunctive by use of the word "or" may properly be amended to charge the offense in the conjunctive by substituting the word "and" for the word "or". Byrd v. State, 228 So. 2d 874 (Miss. 1969).

Indictment charging defendant "did then and there wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously set fire to and burn a certain dwelling house then and there situated," etc., is sufficient to cover an unoccupied dwelling house. Banks v. State, 93 Miss. 700, 47 So. 437 (1908).

An indictment charging, in the language of the statute, the wilful burning of goods and that it was done feloniously but failing to allege defendant's malice is fatally defective. Maxwell v. State, 68 Miss. 339, 8 So. 546 (1891).

5. —Under former statutes.

The element of occupancy by some human being was held to have been sufficiently alleged by an indictment which avers that the house in question was a "dwelling house" occupied by the owner and his family. State v. Stringer, 105 Miss. 851, 63 So. 270 (1913).

Under a former statute making a crime the setting fire in the nighttime to a structure in which some human being usually stays, lodges or resides at night, it has been held that an indictment must aver distinctly that the "setting fire to" was in the nighttime, and also, that the "staying, lodging, and residing" was in the nighttime (Lewis v. State, 49 M 354; Dick v. State, 53 M 384); and that under an indictment following the statute, it was error to refuse to instruct that, if it was not dark when the fire was set, accused could not be convicted. Rist v. State, 93 Miss. 841, 47 So. 433 (1908).

6. Corpus delicti.

Where the corpus delicti has been established by a preponderance of evidence, a confession of guilt is admissible, and if the proof of the corpus delicti coupled with the confession show the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt it is sufficient. Ruffin v. State, 205 Miss. 642, 39 So. 2d 269 (1949).

Incendiary origin of fire is shown by evidence, aside from confession, showing that two fires were going at same time in two separate places in house, that can and jugs of kerosene were so placed as to aid and guarantee successful fire, that household and personal effects of owner of house were found elsewhere after fire at place defendant claimed to have placed them, and that insurance on house and its contents was increased shortly before fire. Ruffin v. State, 205 Miss. 642, 39 So. 2d 269 (1949).

The burning of a dwelling house at night by a fire originating from without, coupled with the fact that shortly after the fire tracks resembling those of the accused were found about 75 yards from the house, is insufficient evidence to establish a corpus delicti of arson. Bolden v. State, 98 Miss. 723, 54 So. 241 (1911).

The corpus delicti in a case of arson consists (1) of the burning of the house or other property; and (2) of criminal agency in causing the fire. Spears v. State, 92 Miss. 613, 46 So. 166 (1908); Mister v. State, 190 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 1966).

7. Evidence.

Rational jury could have concluded from defendant's financial situation and the strong evidence supporting her prior commission of insurance fraud that defendant had the motive to burn down her house and recover the insurance proceeds. Dees v. State, 126 So. 3d 21 (Miss. 2013).

Circumstantial evidence presented by the State was sufficient to sustain defendant's arson conviction; reasonable jurors could have rejected a defense expert's testimony in favor of the testimony of the State's witnesses and found beyond a reasonable doubt that the fire to defendant's home did not have an electrical cause and was incendiary. Dees v. State, 126 So. 3d 21 (Miss. 2013).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder and arson was proper; the evidence was sufficient because defendant intended to severely beat the victim, and then moved and burned his body. Fuqua v.

State, 938 So. 2d 277 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 937 So. 2d 450, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 541 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1344, 127 S. Ct. 2037, 167 L. Ed. 2d 774, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 4043, 75 U.S.L.W. 3554 (2007).

Where defendant's wife testified that defendant killed her ex-boyfriend, set his house on fire, and threw the pistol into the Tennessee River, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of murder, arson, and possession of a firearm by a felon. The trial court properly denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Roland v. State, 882 So. 2d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of arson: the fire started in three different areas in the house and regular household materials were used to start the fire; defendant lied about the condition of the victims, who were killed in the days before the fire, defendant admitted to having hit one victim and dragged him to a back bedroom where one of the fires was started. McGruder v. State, 886 So. 2d 27 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant had a hostile encounter with his estranged wife, purportedly threatened to burn the homes of the wife's two brothers, and within two hours authorities were called to suspicious fires at the brothers' homes, something more than a threat had to link defendant to the subject fires; because there was no physical evidence linking defendant to the fires, the evidence was legally insufficient to sustain his convictions on two counts of arson. Oswalt v. State, 885 So. 2d 720 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 887 So. 2d 183, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1344 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied in an arson case because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support the conviction; the evidence showed that defendant, the sole occupant of a residence, was at home shortly before a fire started, an accelerant was used on a couch, and a vehicle left the residence immediately before the fire was reported. Miller v. State, 856 So. 2d 420 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), affirmed in part and reversed in part by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 694 (Miss. June 17, 2004).

Evidence was insufficient to convict where defendant was at the scene of the fire at a time when he could have started the fire, but there was no admission by him that he actually did start the fire and no physical evidence connecting defendant with the fire. Gatlin v. State, 754 So. 2d 1157 (Miss. 1999).

The evidence was insufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant “willfully and maliciously” started the fire in question where there were no witnesses to the fire, and the defendant stated that he “guessed the fire was started by his cigarette” but he said he did not intentionally start the fire. Isaac v. State, 645 So. 2d 903 (Miss. 1994).

The evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of arson, even though a person other than the defendant may have set the initial fire in the home, where the defendant told a fire marshall that he started one of the fires in the home by taking a burning rag from another fire and throwing it into a closet. Cox v. State, 586 So. 2d 761 (Miss. 1991).

Proof of insurance is probative of the defendant’s intent to burn property under this section, and is, therefore, admissible evidence in an arson prosecution. Wells v. State, 521 So. 2d 1274 (Miss. 1987).

Whether confession in arson prosecution was free and voluntary is a question for the trial judge. Ruffin v. State, 205 Miss. 642, 39 So. 2d 269 (1949).

Under indictment for arson charging that the house was owned by a named individual and other heirs of a deceased whose names are unknown to the grand jurors, but which was then occupied by defendant’s wife, proof that the house did belong to the named individual and to another person or persons unknown was sufficient to support conviction. Jenkins v. State, 197 Miss. 346, 19 So. 2d 921 (1944).

8. Miscellaneous.

Trial court did not err by imposing sentences of five years for conspiracy, 25 years for burglary of a dwelling, five years for grand larceny, and 20 years for first degree arson, as these were all the maximum sentences allowed for these crimes. McCollins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case where defendant was convicted of several crimes relating to the arson and burglary of a residence, his double jeopardy rights were not violated due to the fact that some of the elements of the crimes overlapped; each of the crimes involved required proof of an additional fact that the other did not. McCollins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellant could not rely on Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-101(6) to support her claim that her counsel had inadequately represented her in failing to investigate and present mitigating evidence during her sentencing hearing on her conviction for arson because § 99-19-101(6) concerned mitigating evidence presented to a jury in capital cases. Arson was not a “capital crime” as defined by Miss. Code Ann. § 1-3-4 because § 1-3-4 limited capital crimes to crimes punishable by death or imprisonment for life in the state penitentiary, and the maximum punishment for arson was 20 years in the penitentiary under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-1. Smith v. State, 880 So. 2d 1094 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In arson prosecution of storeowner in which 10 year sentence of main witness who is in custody of Mississippi Department of Corrections is vacated after much pressure is brought to bear on witness to implicate owner as witness does, coupled with absence of any evidence of purpose for owner to burn business, particularly at financial loss, owner is entitled to jury instruction to effect that testimony of accomplice should be viewed with great care and caution. Hussey v. State, 473 So. 2d 478 (Miss. 1985).

The contention that the district attorney, in his examination of the state’s witnesses used language indicating that the barn involved was so connected with the residence as to make its burning first degree arson under Code 1942, § 2006, instead of second degree arson for which the accused was indicted and was being tried, was not well taken where no objections to the use of the word “barn” referring to the larger building that was burned, was made while the witness was being examined and the defense attorney referred to the building as a barn in his cross-examination, and there is no dispute in the evidence whatsoever that the barn was located some 250 yards from the residence, so that there was no connection between the barn and the residence. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

Words to effect that plaintiff set fire to and burned his house held to be actionable per se. Jefferson v. Bates, 152 Miss. 128, 118 So. 717 (1928).

If in a case of arson the verdict be right but the judgment wrong-penalty imposed under wrong section-the supreme court will reverse leaving the verdict unaffected, and remand the case, that proper judgment may be rendered. Dick v. State, 53 Miss. 384 (1876).

9. Lesser-included offense.

Where appellant was charged with two counts of arson under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-1, the burning of the second dwelling was not a lesser-included offense of the first count of arson even if damage to the second dwelling was minimal damage to the property's porch because both crimes shared the same elements of a willful or malicious burning of a house. Section 97-17-1 made no exception for minimum to hardly-any damage, done only to a house's front porch. Smith v. State, 880 So. 2d 1094 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

§ 97-17-3. Arson; first degree; place of worship; failure to report accidental fires; juvenile offenders.

(1) Any person who willfully and maliciously sets fire to, or burns, or causes to be burned, or who is a party to destruction by explosion from combustible material, who aids, counsels, or procures the burning or destruction of any church, temple, synagogue or other established place of worship, whether in use or vacant, shall be guilty of arson in the first degree and, upon conviction therefor, shall be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than five (5) nor more than thirty (30) years and shall pay restitution for any damage caused.

(2) Any person observing or witnessing the destruction by fire of any state-supported school building or any church, temple, synagogue or other established place of worship, whether occupied or vacant, which fire was the result of his or her act of an accidental nature, and who willfully fails to sound the general alarm or report such fire to the local fire department or other local authorities, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction therefor, shall be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than two (2) nor more than ten (10) years and shall pay restitution for any damage caused.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

The trial judge erred in ordering a minor child, who had been adjudicated delinquent on the basis of a violation of this section, to be confined in a training school for a minimum period of six months, under the impression that subsection (3) of this section required him to do so, since the Youth Court Law, enacted in 1979 and amended in 1980, clearly supersedes subsection (3) of this section, so that the lower court was authorized to proceed under § 43-21-605 of the Act, which sets forth disposition alternatives in delinquency cases. In re T.D.B., 446 So. 2d 598 (Miss. 1984).

§ 97-17-4. Forfeiture of property used in commission of arson.

(1) All property, real or personal, including money, used in the course of, intended for use in the course of, derived from, or realized through, conduct in violation of a provision of Section 97-17-1 or 97-17-3 is subject to civil forfeiture to the state pursuant to the provisions of this section; provided, however, that a forfeiture of personal property encumbered by a bona fide security interest or real property encumbered by a bona fide mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance of record shall be subject to the interest of the secured party or subject to the interest of the holder of the mortgage deed of trust, lien of

encumbrance of record if such secured party or holder neither had knowledge of or consented to the act or omission.

(2) Property subject to forfeiture may be seized by law enforcement officers upon process issued by any appropriate court having jurisdiction over the property. Seizure without process may be made if:

(a) The seizure is incident to an arrest or a search under a search warrant or an inspection under a lawful administrative inspection;

(b) The property subject to seizure has been the subject of a prior judgment in favor of the state in a criminal injunction or forfeiture proceeding based upon this section.

(3) When any property is seized pursuant to this section, proceedings under this section shall be instituted promptly.

(4)(a) A petition for forfeiture shall be filed promptly in the name of the State of Mississippi with the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the seizure is made. A copy of such petition shall be served upon the following persons by service of process in the same manner as in civil cases:

(i) The owner of the property, if address is known;

(ii) Any secured party who has registered his lien or filed a financing statement as provided by law, if the identity of such secured party can be ascertained by the state by making a good faith effort to ascertain the identity of such secured party as described in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) of this subsection;

(iii) Any other bona fide lienholder or secured party or other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest of whom the state has actual knowledge;

(iv) A holder of a mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance of record, if the property is real estate by making a good faith inquiry as described in paragraph (g) of this section; and

(v) Any person in possession of property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized.

(b) If the property is a motor vehicle susceptible of titling under the Mississippi Motor Vehicle Title Law and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle has been titled, the state shall make inquiry of the State Tax Commission as to what the records of the State Tax Commission show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien or security interest which affects the vehicle.

(c) If the property is a motor vehicle and is not titled in the State of Mississippi, then the state shall attempt to ascertain the name and address of the person in whose name the vehicle is licensed, and if the vehicle is licensed in a state which has in effect a certificate of title law, the state shall make inquiry of the appropriate agency of that state as to what the records of the agency show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien, security interest, or other instrument in the nature of a security device which affects the vehicle.

(d) If the property is of a nature that a financing statement is required by the laws of this state to be filed to perfect a security interest affecting the property and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that a financing statement covering the security interest has been filed under the laws of this state, the state shall make inquiry of the appropriate office designated in Section 75-9-501 as to what the records show as to who is the record owner of the property and who, if anyone, has filed a financing statement affecting the property.

(e) If the property is an aircraft or part thereof and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that an instrument in the nature of a security device affects the property, then the state shall make inquiry of the administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration as to what the records of the administrator show as to who is the record owner of the property and who, if anyone, holds an instrument in the nature of a security device which affects the property.

(f) In the case of all other personal property subject to forfeiture, if there is any reasonable cause to believe that an instrument in the nature of a security device affects the property, then the state shall make a good faith inquiry to identify the holder of any such instrument.

(g) If the property is real estate, the state shall make inquiry at the appropriate places to determine who is the owner of record and who, if anyone is a holder of a bona fide mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance.

(h) In the event the answer to an inquiry states that the record owner of the property is any person other than the person who was in possession of it when it was seized, or states that any person holds any lien, encumbrance, security interest, other interest in the nature of a security interest, mortgage or deed of trust which affects the property, the state shall cause any record owner and also any lienholder, secured party, other person who holds an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest, or holder of an encumbrance, mortgage or deed of trust which affects the property to be named in the petition of forfeiture and to be served with process in the same manner as in civil cases.

(i) If the owner of the property cannot be found and served with a copy of the petition of forfeiture, or if no person was in possession of the property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized and the owner of the property is unknown, the state shall file with the clerk of the court in which the proceeding is pending an affidavit to such effect, whereupon the clerk of the court shall publish notice of the hearing addressed to "the Unknown Owner of _____," filling in the blank space with a reasonably detailed description of the property subject to forfeiture. Service by publication shall contain the other requisites prescribed in Section 11-33-41, and shall be served as provided in Section 11-33-37 for publication of notice for attachments at law.

(j) No proceedings instituted pursuant to the provisions of this article shall proceed to hearing unless the judge conducting the hearing is satisfied that this section has been complied with. Any answer received from an inquiry required by paragraphs (b) through (g) of this section shall be introduced into evidence at the hearing.

(5)(a) An owner of property that has been seized shall file a verified answer within twenty (20) days after the completion of service of process. If no answer is filed, the court shall hear evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture and forfeit the property to the state. If an answer is filed, a time for hearing on forfeiture shall be set within thirty (30) days of filing the answer or at the succeeding term of court if court would not be in progress within thirty (30) days after filing the answer. Provided, however, that upon request by the state or the owner of the property, the court may postpone said forfeiture hearing to a date past the time any criminal action is pending against said owner.

(b) If the owner of the property has filed a verified answer denying that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the burden is on the state to prove that the property is subject to forfeiture. The burden of proof placed upon the state shall be clear and convincing proof. However, if no answer has been filed by the owner of the property, the petition for forfeiture may be introduced into evidence and is prima facie evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture.

(c) At the hearing any claimant of any right, title, or interest in the property may prove his lien, encumbrance, security interest, other interest in the nature of a security interest, mortgage or deed of trust to be bona fide and created without knowledge or consent that the property was to be used so as to cause the property to be subject to forfeiture.

(d) If it is found that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the judge shall forfeit the property to the state. However, if proof at the hearing discloses that the interest of any bona fide lienholder, secured party, other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest or any holder of a bona fide encumbrance, mortgage or deed of trust is greater than or equal to the present value of the property, the court shall order the property released to him. If such interest is less than the present value of the property and if the proof shows that the property is subject to forfeiture, the court shall order the property forfeited to the state.

(6)(a) All personal property, including money, which is forfeited to the state and is not capable of being sold at public auction shall be liquidated and the proceeds, after deduction of all storage and court costs, shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited in the General Fund of the state.

(b) All real estate which is forfeited to the state shall be sold to the highest bidder at a public auction to be conducted by the state at such place, on such notice and in accordance with the same procedure, as far as practicable, as is required in the case of sales of land under execution of law. The proceeds of such sale shall first be applied to the cost and expense in administering and conducting such sale, then to the satisfaction of all mortgages, deeds of trusts, liens and encumbrances of record on such property. All proceeds in excess of the amount necessary for the cost of the sale of such land and the satisfaction of any liens thereon shall be deposited in the General Fund of the State Treasury.

(c) All other property that has been seized by the state and that has been forfeited shall, except as otherwise provided, be sold at a public auction for cash by the state to the highest and best bidder after advertising the sale for at least once each week for three (3) consecutive weeks, the last notice to appear not more than ten (10) days nor less than five (5) days prior to such sale, in a newspaper having a general circulation throughout the State of Mississippi. Such notices shall contain a description of the property to be sold and a statement of the time and place of sale. It shall not be necessary to the validity of such sale either to have the property present at the place of sale or to have the name of the owner thereof stated in such notice. The proceeds of the sale shall be delivered to the circuit clerk and shall be disposed of as follows:

(i) To any bona fide lienholder, secured party, or other party holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest, to the extent of his interest; and

(ii) The balance, if any, after deduction of all storage and court costs, shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited with and used as general funds of the state.

(d) The State Tax Commission shall issue a certificate of title to any person who purchases property under the provisions of this section when a certificate of title is required under the laws of this state.

(ii) The balance, if any, after deduction of all storage and court costs, shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited with and used as general funds of the state.

(d) The State Tax Commission shall issue a certificate of title to any person who purchases property under the provisions of this section when a certificate of title is required under the laws of this state.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. Evidence.
4. Instructions.

1. In general.

As a matter of common sense, a person who is deaf should not sit on a jury trying a second-degree arson charge but, where the circuit court interrogated the juror with defective hearing and was satisfied that the juror could hear and understand the proceedings, the court was within its discretion and committed no error in its denial of a motion for mistrial and a subsequent motion for a new trial made upon the ground of a defective hearing of the juror. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

While it follows as a matter of common sense that a person who is deaf should not sit on a jury trying a second-degree arson case, where the circuit court had interrogated the juror alleged to have defective hearing and had satisfied itself that the juror could hear and understand the proceedings, the court did not abuse its discretion or commit error in denying defendants motions for mistrial and for a new trial. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

The contention that the district attorney, in his examination of the state's witnesses used language indicating that the barn involved was so connected with the residence as to make its burning first degree arson under Code 1942, § 2006, instead of second degree arson for which the accused was indicted and was being tried, was not well taken where no objections to the use of the word "barn" referring to the larger building that was burned, was made while the witness was being examined and the defense attorney referred to the building as a barn in his cross-examination, and there is no dispute in the evidence whatever that the barn was located some 250 yards from the residence, so that there was no connection between the barn and the residence. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

2. Indictment.

The fact that § 97-17-11 might also have covered and made unlawful the conduct of the defendant did not preclude his being charged under this section, the second degree arson statute, provided the indictment fairly charged him with the violation of the latter statute. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert.

denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

An indictment stating, in terms of the statute, that the accused set fire and burned a building unlawfully, wilfully, maliciously and feloniously, and that he did so with the wilful, malicious and felonious intent to injure and prejudice the owner of the building, necessarily charged that the accused intended to burn the building. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

An indictment for arson under this section [Code 1942, § 2007] is good though it does not aver that the burning was done in the nighttime, or that there was at the time some human being usually staying, lodging, or residing at night. Dick v. State, 53 Miss. 384 (1876).

3. Evidence.

Defendant's admission that he intended to burn a building and that the vent panels and shoe rack were burned was sufficient to establish second degree arson under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-5 because destruction of the building was not required. Hughes v. State, 989 So. 2d 434 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

On appeal from a second degree arson conviction, the defendant was not in a position to complain regarding evidence concerning insurance where he was a first party to elicit testimony concerning the subject matter, and he failed to object timely when the prosecution followed up. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

The uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, where not wholly improbable or otherwise incredible, may be sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of arson in the second degree. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

An arson defendant, whose right to counsel had attached, had not waived his right to assistance of counsel incident to interrogation, where, at the time he made self-incriminating statements, he had no knowledge or way of knowing that he was being interrogated by an informant, wearing a concealed microphone, who was acting for law enforcement officers, and that his statements were being monitored and recorded, and, since, defendant's state constitutional rights were violated, the admission of tapes containing the incriminating statements in evidence, over defendant's objection, constituted reversible error. Page v. State, 495 So. 2d 436 (Miss. 1986).

Statements in tape recorded conversation between defendant and informant which incriminated defendant's wife in arson venture were pure hearsay, and inadmissible at wife's trial when offered as proof of her acts. Page v. State, 495 So. 2d 436 (Miss. 1986).

Testimony of person hired by saloon owner to burn competing saloon, which testimony is consistent with fire marshal's testimony concerning manner in which saloon was burned and is also corroborated by testimony of other witnesses, is sufficient to support conviction of saloon owner for arson. Pace v. State, 473 So. 2d 167 (Miss. 1985).

Although conflicting, evidence, including testimony of a witness that he had seen the accused set fire to a barn and then drag a lighted bale of straw and place it in a shed in an effort to burn the shed and the tools therein, was sufficient to sustain the accused's conviction under this section [Code 1942, § 2007]. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

Evidence establishing that the prosecuting witness had previously prosecuted the accused was competent as showing a motive on the part of the accused for burning the buildings of the prosecuting witness. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

Where the accused took the stand as a witness in a prosecution for second degree arson, he thereby subjected himself to cross-examination, and made competent his own testimony, or any other admissible evidence tending to establish his former conviction of crimes. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

4. Instructions.

State's instruction, which followed the wording of the statute and the indictment, correctly informed the jury of the elements of the crime of second degree arson notwithstanding the fact that it failed to expressly and specifically require the jury to find the accused had the intent to burn the buildings. Dorroh v. State, 229 Miss. 315, 90 So. 2d 653 (1956).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

2. Sentence.

1. In general.

Felony murder as a capital crime by definition required that there be two felonies, the homicide being the intentional or unintentional product of the other felony. The elements set out in the indictment against defendant only charged one felony, that defendant killed the victim by setting the victim on fire and that act was not a capital offense; in order for defendant to have been charged with capital murder, defendant must have been charged with arson by setting the house trailer or sofa on fire and that defendant killed the victim (defendant's husband) as a result. Buckley v. State, 875 So. 2d 1110 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

A count in an indictment charging that defendant burned a house and designated personalty therein, charges two offenses. State v. Freeman, 90 Miss. 315, 43 So. 289 (1907).

2. Sentence.

Motion for post-conviction relief was granted in a case where defendant pled guilty to third degree arson for setting fire to a mattress in his jail cell because his five-year sentence was in excess of the statutory maximum under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-7. White v. State, 940 So. 2d 958 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

§ 97-17-9. Arson; fourth degree; attempt to burn.

(1) Any person who wilfully and maliciously attempts to set fire to or attempts to burn or to aid, counsel or procure the burning of any of the buildings or property mentioned in the foregoing sections, or who commits any act preliminary thereto, or in furtherance thereof, shall be guilty of arson in the fourth degree and upon conviction thereof be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than two years or fined not to exceed one thousand dollars.

(2) The placing or distributing of any flammable, explosive or combustible material or substance, or any device in any building or property mentioned in the foregoing sections in an arrangement or preparation with intent to eventually, wilfully and maliciously set fire to or burn same, or to procure the setting fire to or burning of same shall, for the purposes of this section constitute an attempt to burn such building or property.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Weight of the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of conspiracy to commit arson in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-1 and attempted arson in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-9 because an accomplice’s testimony that he and defendant entered into an agreement for him to burn the victim’s vehicle was uncontradicted; in addition to the testimony of the accomplice was the of other witnesses who provided additional evidence of defendant’s animosity towards the victim. Bradford v. State, 102 So. 3d 312 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of conspiracy to commit arson in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-1 and attempted arson in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-9 because the jury could conclude from an accomplice's testimony that he and defendant entered into an agreement for him to burn the victim's vehicle; the accomplice told the same basic story to the police that he told to the jury, and nothing in the record indicated that the accomplice's testimony was unreasonable, inconsistent, or impeached. Bradford v. State, 102 So. 3d 312 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012).

In a prosecution for arson indictments couched in the language of this section were sufficient to charge defendant with the crime of fourth-degree arson, despite the fact that they did not charge an overt act toward commission of the crime with which defendant was charged, where the statutory language in the indictments plainly and fully informed defendant of the nature and the causes of the charges against him. Jackson v. State, 420 So. 2d 1045 (Miss. 1982).

§ 97-17-11. Arson; insured property.

Any person who wilfully and with intent to injure or defraud the insurer sets fire to or burns or attempts so to do or who causes to be burned or who aids, counsels or procures the burning of any building, structure or personal property, of whatsoever class or character, whether the property of himself or of another, which shall at the time be insured by any person, company or corporation against loss or damage by fire, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof, be sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than one (1) nor more than ten (10) years.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. Evidence.

1. In general.

The inability to recover on fire insurance policies is no defense of prosecution of named insured for statutory offense of wilfully burning an insured building with intent to defraud insurer. Brower v. State, 217 Miss. 425, 64 So. 2d 576 (1953).

One convicted of arson was properly sentenced under statute in effect when arson was committed, instead of under repealing statute enacted before trial prescribing lighter penalty, in absence of contrary provision in repealing statute. Byrd v. State, 165 Miss. 30, 143 So. 852 (1932).

2. Indictment.

The fact that this section might also have covered and made unlawful the conduct of the defendant did not preclude his being charged under § 97-17-5, the second degree arson statute, provided the indictment fairly charged him with the violation of the latter statute. Weaver v. State, 497 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus denied, 896 F.2d 126 (5th Cir. 1990), reh'g denied (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 966, 111 S. Ct. 427, 112 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1990).

Indictment charging burning of building with intent to injure insurance company sufficiently alleged ownership of house and that defendant knew of insurance. State v. Ingram, 166 Miss. 543, 146 So. 638 (1933).

3. Evidence.

A prior arson conviction might be admissible for impeachment purposes as a crime involving dishonesty or false statement in situations, for example, where the defendant burned a building as part of a scheme to defraud an insurance company. However, where an arson conviction was admitted for impeachment purposes and the prosecution failed to offer prima facie evidence that the arson involved fraud, dishonesty, false statement or other elements suggesting a propensity for lying, the case would be reversed and remanded for a new trial on all issues. McInnis v. State, 527 So. 2d 84 (Miss. 1988).

In prosecution for wilful and felonious burning of a church, other evidence and confession were sufficient to establish a corpus delicti and sustain conviction. Brower v. State, 217 Miss. 425, 64 So. 2d 576 (1953).

Circumstantial evidence showing beyond reasonable doubt that house was burned by persons employed by defendant to burn it held sufficient to sustain arson conviction. Byrd v. State, 165 Miss. 30, 143 So. 852 (1932).

That state in arson prosecution for burning of insured property failed to introduce policy to show that automobile was insured against fire held not error, existence of insurance being amply established by other evidence. Gipson v. State, 162 Miss. 480, 139 So. 868 (1932).

Evidence in arson prosecution for burning of insured property, held sufficient to establish corpus delicti, as regards admissibility of confession. Gipson v. State, 162 Miss. 480, 139 So. 868 (1932).

That missing parts of automobile were found in place indicated in confession of defendant was strong proof that crime had been committed in connection therewith. Gipson v. State, 162 Miss. 480, 139 So. 868 (1932).

Evidence held sufficient to establish defendant's guilt. Gipson v. State, 162 Miss. 480, 139 So. 868 (1932).

Admitting letter, proof of loss, and bill of sale, if incompetent because not identified as bearing signature of defendant, held harmless; defendant's guilt being clear. Gipson v. State, 162 Miss. 480, 139 So. 868 (1932).

§ 97-17-13. Arson; willfully or negligently firing woods, marsh, meadow, etc.; restitution of fire suppression costs.

(1) If any person willfully, maliciously, and feloniously sets on fire any woods, meadow, marsh, field or prairie, not his own, he is guilty of a felony and shall, upon conviction, be sentenced to the State Penitentiary for not more than two (2) years nor less than one (1) year, or fined not less than Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) nor more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both, in the discretion of the court.

(2)(a) If any person recklessly or with gross negligence causes fire to burn any woods, meadow, marsh, field or prairie, not his own, he is guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) nor more than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), or imprisoned in the county jail not more than three (3) months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

(b) If a person has a brush or debris pile or other material which is or was being burned and reasonable and prudent efforts were not taken to prevent the spread of the fire onto the lands of another shall be evidence that such person recklessly or with gross negligence caused the land to burn.

(3) In addition to the penalties provided in this section, upon conviction, a person shall be ordered to reimburse and pay in restitution directly to any organized fire suppression agency recognized by the Mississippi Forestry Commission all the costs the agency incurred related to the suppression and abatement of the fire.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In a prosecution for setting fire to a field, where the defendant was tried as a principal on a theory that he was an accessory before the fact, but the only evidence of his participation in the crime consisted in the fact that he was observed sitting in an automobile stopped adjacent to a field which two other men were in the act of firing, and when someone gave an order to put out the fire, the two young men returned to defendant's car and he drove away, such evidence, while sufficient for submission of the case to the jury, left the defendant's guilt in such serious doubt that he would be granted a new trial. Russell v. Ralston Purina Co., 234 So. 2d 50 (Miss. 1970).

The appearance of a forestry commission employee, who had investigated a forest fire and talked to the witnesses, but had no personal knowledge of the facts, did not constitute an improper influence on the grand jury which indicted the defendant on a charge of feloniously firing woods not his own. Case v. State, 220 So. 2d 289 (Miss. 1969).

The fact that a forestry commission employee, who investigated a forest fire and talked to the witnesses but had no personal knowledge of the facts, testified before the grand jury that he brought the case up in Justice of the Peace Court and had the witnesses there for the preliminary hearing, did not place him in the category of a special prosecutor employed to assist with the prosecution, and hence his appearance before the grand jury was not an improper influence. Case v. State, 220 So. 2d 289 (Miss. 1969).

1. In general.

In a case where defendant was convicted of several crimes relating to the arson and burglary of a residence, his double jeopardy rights were not violated due to the fact that some of the elements of the crimes overlapped; each of the crimes involved required proof of an additional fact that the other did not. McCullins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Burglary conviction was upheld where acquittal on armed robbery charges did not invoke double jeopardy concerns because defendant was not previously tried for either of the charges and because the burglary charge did not contain the same elements, such as exhibiting a deadly weapon and putting the victim in fear; similarly, the burglary included elements not found in armed robbery, such as breaking and entering. Smallwood v. State, 930 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

After his conviction for burglary of an inhabited dwelling, defendant first argued that the trial court should have given a circumstantial evidence instruction because the prosecution did not have a confession or an eyewitness. However, defendant had failed to offer such an instruction and it was not the obligation of the trial court to have prepared and submitted same. Harris v. State, 908 So. 2d 868 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a case where defendants were convicted of burglary of a dwelling and simple assault, the evidence at trial did not support a lesser included offense instruction of trespass because (1) had defendants succeeded in their defense that they had permission to enter the dwelling, they would not have been guilty of trespass; (2) once defendants realized they were not welcome on the property and that they would not receive permission to enter the home, they broke into and entered the home when they punched through the tape covering the hole by the front door in order to unlock the door from the inside; (3) the existence of the marks on the rear entrance where a tire iron was used to attempt entry supported the more serious offense of burglary rather than trespass; and (4) there was evidence of intent to commit an assault when defendants entered the home based on their previous threats made to the second victim, their use of force to enter the home, their use of violence inside the home, and one defendant's actions of hurling a large rock into the second victim's windshield when he tried to drive away. Arbuckle v. State, 894 So. 2d 619 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari dismissed by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 397 (Miss. 2005).

Where defendant was convicted of burglary of a dwelling (no threats or force toward persons were shown), his allegation of error concerned the introduction of a small kitchen knife that police found on him when he was arrested. However, as to relevancy and admissibility, the record did not indicate any abuse of discretion by the trial judge in admitting the evidence. Clayton v. State, 893 So. 2d 246 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 101 (Miss. 2005).

Where three accomplices kicked in the door of a home and stole several items, defendant was properly convicted of burglarizing a home based on evidence that he was seen driving the getaway car. Deloney v. State, 874 So. 2d 445 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant's 20-year sentence with only 14 years actually to serve was within the statutory parameters and was not grossly disproportionate to the crime, defendant failed to show that his sentence was disproportionately harsh for the crime charges, and therefore it was not cruel and unusual. Alston v. State, 841 So. 2d 215 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The crime of murder can be the underlying element required to establish the crime of burglary. Stevens v. State, 806 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. 2001), writ of certiorari denied by 537 U.S. 1232, 123 S. Ct. 1384, 155 L. Ed. 2d 195, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1755, 71 U.S.L.W. 3566 (2003).

The defendant was properly sentenced under this section, rather than under former § 97-17-19, where (1) former § 97-17-19 was repealed and this section was enacted in 1996, (2) the offense at issue occurred in 1997, and (3) although the original indictment cited former § 97-17-19, the indictment was amended to cite this section. Terry v. State, 755 So. 2d 41 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Proof that a house was occupied at the time of the burglary is not required. Wilk- erson v. State, 724 So. 2d 1089 (Ct. App. 1998).

A burglarized house was a “dwelling” within the meaning of the statute where the owner of the house was an elderly woman who lived there for four months of every year, received her mail there, and kept personal property there, even though the burglary occurred during the eight months that she lived elsewhere. Wilkinson v. State, 724 So. 2d 1089 (Ct. App. 1998).

The word “crime” in the burglary statutes includes misdemeanors as well as felonies. Ashley v. State, 538 So. 2d 1181 (Miss. 1989).

Jury could find that incident charged as burglary happened at night, where it was well established in Mississippi that jury was entitled to consider not only facts as testified to by witnesses, but also all inferences that reasonably and logically could be deduced from facts in evidence, and testimony from several witnesses indicated that incident occurred around 7:00 in evening, and jury was properly instructed as to law and heard testimony of witnesses. Burney v. State, 515 So. 2d 1154 (Miss. 1987), but see McCarty v. State, 554 So. 2d 909 (Miss. 1989).

Defendant’s motion to dismiss, on double jeopardy grounds, an indictment charging him with armed burglary of an inhabited dwelling at nighttime was improperly denied, where there was a common nucleus of operative facts from which arose the prosecution for burglary and an earlier prosecution for rape, where defendant had earlier been acquitted of the rape, where the not guilty verdict in the rape trial was well within the evidence, where defendant’s only defense at the rape trial was that another person committed the crime, where the jury could not rationally have acquitted him on any other basis, and where the state offered substantial evidence during the rape trial to show that he broke and entered the rape victim’s home. Sanders v. State, 429 So. 2d 245 (Miss. 1983).

The trial court’s failure to define the word “night,” as used in this section, for the jury’s guidance would not require reversal of the defendant’s conviction for burglary, where the indictment and proof were sufficient to charge and support the defendant’s conviction for burglary as defined by former § 97-17-21. Harkins & Co. v. Elliott, 415 So. 2d 678 (Miss. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1107, 103 S. Ct. 733, 74 L. Ed. 2d 956 (1983).

An indictment which charged a defendant with breaking and entering into the dwelling house of the victim with intent to commit rape satisfied the statutory requirement of “intent to commit some crime” in a dwelling. Jefferson v. State, 386 So. 2d 200 (Miss. 1980).

2. Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of burglary because, while two witnesses who testified as to defendant’s involvement with them in the burglary could not establish where the burglary occurred, evidence regarding items taken made it reasonable for the jury to infer that the apartment defendant and the others burglarized was the victim’s apartment. Terry v. State, 126 So. 3d 946 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of burglary and the verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because, even if jury believed that defendant did not personally go into victim’s apartment, he was an accomplice as he supplied one of the guns used in the robbery and provided a place to hide the stolen items. Gardner v. State, 121 So. 3d 309 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Testimony from the victim, police detectives, and an eyewitness who had identified defendant as the person who broke into the victim’s house and stole a television, was sufficient to convict defendant of burglary of a dwelling, and defendant’s conviction was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Luster v. State, 133 So. 3d 849 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 133 So. 3d 818, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 153 (Miss. 2014), writ of certiorari denied by 134 S. Ct. 1951, 188 L. Ed. 2d 971, 2014 U.S. LEXIS 3049, 82 U.S.L.W. 3630 (U.S. 2014).

Although the victim of a burglary incorrectly described the perpetrator as approximately 18 years old, the evidence was sufficient for a jury to determine beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the person who committed the crime as the victim had sufficient time to observe defendant, she picked defendant out of a photo lineup, and when defendant was arrested, he had the same gold teeth the victim noted in her description of the perpetrator to the authorities. Bell v. State, 125 So. 3d 75 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 123 So. 3d 450, 2013 Miss. LEXIS 563 (Miss. 2013).

Victim's testimony that at the time she discovered defendant in her boyfriend's apartment, that the front door was locked, that there was evidence of forced entry through the apartment's window and that defendant was holding the victim's wallet when discovered, was sufficient to support his conviction and the denial of his motion for directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Bell v. State, 125 So. 3d 75 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 123 So. 3d 450, 2013 Miss. LEXIS 563 (Miss. 2013).

Victim's eyewitness testimony that defendant entered her dwelling without her knowledge or permission was sufficient to identify defendant as the person who was in her home and was sufficient to convict him of burglary of a dwelling. Conner v. State, 138 So. 3d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), affirmed by 138 So. 3d 143, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 246 (Miss. 2014).

Evidence that defendant possessed fruits of a burglary on the same day it occurred, and concealed the true origin of one of the stolen items, was sufficient to support his conviction of burglary in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23(1), Taylor v. State, 110 So. 3d 776 (Miss. 2013).

Evidence presented at trial was sufficient to support defendant's convictions of aggravated assault (Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2)(a)) and burglary of a dwelling (Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23), as it established that he drove two men to pick up a crowbar and then drove them to the victim's house, where they used the crowbar to pry open the door and assault the victim; moreover, his confession established his involvement in the crimes. Whitaker v. State, 114 So. 3d 725 (Miss. Ct. App. 2012), writ of certiorari denied by 2013 Miss. LEXIS 331 (Miss. June 6, 2013).

Defendant's conviction for burglary was supported by sufficient evidence because defendant's theory of an unidentified third man was presented to the jury, but the jury rejected it, and defendant's continued flight evidenced a guilty conscience; defendant's tattoos were consistent with an officer's observation of the man who fled the scene, and the evidence of his heavy, dark tattooing provided the jury with a basis to resolve any inconsistency in the officer's testimony. Dison v. State, 61 So. 3d 975 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari dismissed by 131 So. 3d 578, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 40 (Miss. 2014).

There was insufficient evidence to adjudicate a juvenile a delinquent child for the act of burglary, a violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23(1), where there was no evidence that the juvenile broke and entered the dwelling house, or had any intent to commit any crime therein; thus, neither element of burglary was proven beyond a reasonable doubt. C.K.B. v. Harrison County Youth Court, 36 So. 3d 1267 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's convictions for house burglary, aggravated assault, armed robbery, and auto theft were proper because the evidence was sufficient. In part, defendant severely beat the victim, demanded that she give him her purse, and then took her purse, a gun, and a set of keys to the victim's vehicle. The victim later identified defendant, based upon her own independent recollection, in a photographic lineup. Brunner v. State, 37 So. 3d 645 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 36 So. 3d 455, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 323 (Miss. 2010).

Where defendant was convicted of burglary after breaking into the home of a woman whom he had dated and who told defendant that she did not want to see him again, the jury verdict finding defendant guilty of burglary was not against the weight of the evidence because, although defendant claimed that the window through which he allegedly climbed was too small to accommodate his size, the jury saw photographs of the window and the resolution of factual disputes was within its province. Further, officers found a chair outside that had been placed in front of the window through which defendant allegedly climbed, the screen looked as if it had been torn off or pried open, defendant was found near the victim's home, and as he was arrested, defendant stated that he was just trying to get the victim's attention. Alesich v. State, 26 So. 3d 1080 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. 2010).

Along with the testimony of the victim and codefendant, the jury also was presented with the testimony of multiple sheriff's deputies, forensic analysts, and with that of a witness, who stated that defendant admitted to him his involvement in the crimes; after hearing all the evidence and being adequately instructed on the applicable law, the jury rendered its decision in due course, and any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. Christmas v. State, 10 So. 3d 413 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23(1), was supported by the evidence because defendant crashed through a glass window and advanced briskly upon one victim with hands raised, in what was described as a threatening gesture; hence, the evidence was sufficient to infer that defendant intended to commit an assault under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(1). Walker v. State, 21 So. 3d 663 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 20 So. 3d 680, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 578 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence as sufficient to support defendant's convictions of burglary, kidnapping, and sexual battery where the father of the two-year-old victim testified that he went to pick up his girlfriend from work and left his children secured in their home, that he encountered the 17-year-old defendant while en route and told him where he was going, that he discovered upon his return that his home had been broken into and that his daughter was missing, that he found defendant with his daughter in an abandoned structure nearby, and that, upon examination, the girl's genital area was red, bleeding, and scratched and where a physician who examined the victim testified that the girl's vagina was red, swollen, and irritated but that there was no evidence of infection as the cause. Because the two-year-old victim was too short to have unlocked the door to the family home by herself and had never walked out of the home unassisted, the evidence permitted the jury to reasonably infer that defendant had broken into the family residence, removed the victim therefrom without her father's permission, and sexually assaulted her. Moton v. State, 999 So. 2d 1287 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Reasonable jurors could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant kicked in the victim's door where there was no evidence that the victim invited defendant or the unidentified man in her home, and every reasonable inference arising from defendant's actions and words immediately prior to the breaking in of the door would support the conclusion that it was indeed defendant who did so. Hope v. State, 992 So. 2d 666 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

There was no merit to defendant's claim that a trial court peremptorily found him guilty of burglary by prohibiting him from arguing self-defense where the underlying crime that he was charged with to elevate his murder charge to capital murder under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(e) was burglary under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, and Mississippi adhered to the common law rule that an aggressor was precluded from pleading self-defense. As a result, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's attempt to argue self-defense at trial. Beale v. State, 2 So. 3d 693 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 90 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was insufficient to support defendant's burglary conviction where neither a theft from an open, freestanding structure nor a possible entry of a freestanding shed satisfied the elements of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 (Rev. 2006), the shed did not meet the Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-31 (Rev. 2006) definition of dwelling house, and there was no breaking and entering involved in the open carport. Jefferson v. State, 977 So. 2d 431 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant committed a burglary in a capital murder case as there was a pry mark on the front door, the front door was left ajar, a television was missing, and drawers were left open, and defendant was found in possession of the victim's personal property shortly after the burglary. Evidence also showed that defendant broke into the victim's house, killed her, and stole some of her personal belongings because he desired money to purchase drugs, and further testimony established that he sold the television and used the proceeds to purchase crack. Young v. State, 981 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 206 (Miss. 2008).

Although victims could not positively identify defendant as a second gunman who entered their apartment, they were able to provide police with a description, a stocking cap, clothing, and a gun; a reasonable jury could have found defendant guilty of burglary and robbery beyond a reasonable doubt. Guyton v. State, 962 So. 2d 722 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

State presented sufficient evidence to convict defendant of burglary of a dwelling, a violation of Miss. Code Ann § 97-17-23, given the victim's recognition of defendant as the person in her house, defendant's admission that he was in the house, and the testimony that the victim's purse and money were missing after defendant fled her house. Parker v. State, 962 So. 2d 25 (Miss. 2007).

Lower court, which denied appellant's motions for new trial and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, did not err in finding that there was sufficient evidence to convict appellant of burglary of a dwelling where appellant confessed to the crime and appellant was found in possession of items stolen from the burglarized home within an hour of the robbery when he tried to pawn the stolen goods at a pawn shop. Hill v. State, 952 So. 2d 326 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 958 So. 2d 1232, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 322 (Miss. 2007).

Where the suspect broke into a locked basement in the doctor's house and stole $6,000 in pre-1959 currency, defendant was observed in a travel agency spending strange-looking currency printed prior to 1959, and defendant was a frequent guest in the doctor's home and told a friend that he had taken the money from the doctor's home; the direct and circumstantial evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction of burglary and larceny of a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23. Sandefer v. State, 952 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of burglary of a dwelling because: (1) there was evidence that defendant entered an outer door and then an interior door to access the victim's living area; (2) the victim testified that both the outer and interior doors had been locked when she went to sleep that night; and (3) the inner door bore signs of having been forced open. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support a guilty verdict for attempted burglary because, inter alia: (1) the victim testified that she heard someone removing the screen from her bedroom window and breathing heavily; (2) once the scene was investigated by the victim and the officers, the screen was found removed from the window; and (3) the victim testified to having seen defendant in her backyard shortly after hearing the window screen tampering; thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict, his request for a peremptory jury instruction, and his motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Brown v. State, 961 So. 2d 720 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Owner testified that he locked the door-knob and shut the door after allowing defendant to enter his mobile home, and both the owner and a victim testified that defendant declined to sit down and that she stood facing them with her back to the door; according to the victim, defendant had her hand on the doorknob before three masked men rushed through the door, and she never saw any of the masked men point a gun at defendant. Also, immediately after the men left, defendant refused to help the victim untie the owner; thus, the evidence was sufficient, and defendant's convictions for burglary of a dwelling, robbery, kidnapping, and auto theft were not against the weight of the evidence. Brown v. State, 926 So. 2d 283 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict and his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict; given the State's evidence, reasonable and fair-minded jurors could have concluded that defendant was guilty of burglary of a dwelling. Also, the pictures of defendant's car were consistent with the description given by the victim to the deputies, the victim identified defendant as the intruder, and clothes were found that matched the description of the intruder's clothes provided by the victim. Coleman v. State, 926 So. 2d 205 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied where the evidence was sufficient to support a rape conviction given the victim's uncontradicted testimony; defendant's act of opening the porch door was clearly sufficient to constitute a breaking, and entry through the porch was required to gain entrance into the victim's home. Davis v. State, 910 So. 2d 1228 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence demonstrated that the elements of burglary under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 were met where the other participants testified that defendant waited inside while the others ransacked the house searching for valuables and defendant shared in the proceeds. Stewart v. State, 909 So. 2d 52 (Miss. 2005).

Evidence sufficed for defendant's convictions for burglary of an inhabited dwelling and sale of a stolen firearm. The two-month time period, between the burglary and the date defendant was found in possession of the gun, distracted from the inference that he committed the burglary, but as to other inferences, he had made reference to other stolen items (never recovered), he had possession of the stolen firearm, and he had sought to sell same to an informant in a concealed setting. Harris v. State, 908 So. 2d 868 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence offered was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted burglary of a dwelling and was not against the weight of the evidence because (1) defendant was seen with a knife outside the victim's house; (2) defendant banged on the victim's front door with such force that objects on the walls of the entrance hall crashed to the floor and the peephole in the door was catapulted out of it; (3) no reasonable person with a broken-down car who needed help would approach a house in the same manner; (4) defendant had burglarized many homes in the past; and (5) defendant's actions on the day in question undoubtedly showed that he was attempting to burglarize the victim's dwelling. Jones v. State, 904 So. 2d 149 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for house burglary was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because (1) the victim testified that someone entered her home, took her purse and her car keys, and stole her car; (2) two witnesses testified to defendant's involvement in the crime; (3) the investigating officer testified that he saw the victim's car near the house where defendant was staying; and (4) defendant's accomplice was later seen driving the car. Harris v. State, 907 So. 2d 972 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 910 So. 2d 574, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 453 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's actions at the first victim's home were sufficient to support defendants' convictions for the crimes of burglary and simple assault because (1) defendants were present at the home for the sole purpose to obtain money; (2) when the victims did not voluntarily allow defendants into the home, defendants went into a rage and broke into the dwelling and assaulted two of the victims; (3) one of the defendants then proceeded to commit a further act of violence when he burst the windshield of one of the second victim's vehicle with a large rock; (4) the other defendant continued to threaten and intimidate the first victim until she surrendered her paycheck whereupon defendants left the premises and cashed the check in order to satisfy a debt; and (5) the jury could reasonably infer that defendants formed the intent to assault those inside the home immediately upon gaining entry to the home. Arbuckle v. State, 894 So. 2d 619 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari dismissed by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 397 (Miss. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling where, although nothing was actually stolen from the house, the jury could have inferred from the testimony that defendant broke into the house with the intent to steal. Clay v. State, 881 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 96 (Miss. 2005).

The State presented testimony from witnesses who identified defendant as the person who committed both the crimes charged. The first victim testified that while working at the convenience store, an individual later identified as defendant, held a box cutter near her neck, and took money out of the cash register and in the burglary case, the victim testified that she was awakened by her cousin's screaming and directly confronted defendant; defendant's motions for a directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and for a new trial, were therefore properly denied. Hill v. State, 912 So. 2d 991 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for burglary of a dwelling house because an officer saw defendant leave the residence through a patio door after receiving a burglary complaint, the door had been forcibly opened, two televisions were moved towards an exit in the home, and a victim testified that the house had not been left in that condition. Phinisee v. State, 864 So. 2d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where a neighbor saw defendant entering and exiting the victim's home, a deputy testified that defendant admitted to being in the victim's home, and the victim testified that she was unable to identify any particular items as having been stolen but noticed that the drawers to her chest had been rifled and were in disarray, the State offered substantial evidence on each element of burglary. Cortez v. State, 876 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 66, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 859 (Miss. 2004), dismissed by 9 So. 3d 445, 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 209 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Though the testimony of defendant and the woman conflicted about his intent in entering the woman's home, the jury was entitled to believe the woman's testimony, as opposed to defendant's testimony, that defendant forced his way into her house, placed a makeshift noose around her neck, and threatened to kill her, as defendant admitted entering her house and backing her against a wall; accordingly, the evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction for burglary as the evidence was not such that no reasonable juror could have assigned guilt to defendant on that charge. Ferguson v. State, 865 So. 2d 369 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 866 So. 2d 473, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 76 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence that police found defendant's fingerprint in a residence that was burglarized and that defendant pawned items that were taken from the residence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for burglary on an inhabited dwelling, and the appellate court refused to review defendant's claim that his sentence of 22 years' confinement was too harsh. Brown v. State, 875 So. 2d 214 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 876 So. 2d 376, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 697 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to allow a jury to resolve issues of credibility against defendant, and return a verdict of guilty; defendant admitted through his testimony that he broke a window at the victims' home, his fingerprints were found on the glass that matched the prints on the card bearing defendant's information from the police, and the victims both testified that defendant admitted that he committed the offense. Bridges v. State, 841 So. 2d 1189 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence that the victim found defendant in the victim's home without permission or explanation and that defendant fled the home when confronted by the victim was sufficient for the jury to infer that defendant had the intent to commit theft inside the home and was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of burglary of a dwelling despite the fact that nothing was taken from the home and very little inside the home had been disturbed; identification of defendant by the victim following defendant's arrest was more than sufficient. Crawford v. State, 839 So. 2d 594 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence where defendant was not only found in close proximity to the burglarized home, but was actually found by the victim at the home that was burglarized; in addition, defendant was in close proximity to the stolen property and the items in his car provided a reasonable inference that the items were in his possession, which was legally sufficient for the jury to infer guilt of burglary. O'Neal v. State, 840 So. 2d 750 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

State proved that defendant forcibly entered the victim's dwelling and that the evidence did not show that the entry was voluntary; even if the door was unlocked or if only slight force was needed to gain entry, such entry was forcible for the purposes of the burglary statute, and there was no evidence that the victim invited defendant into his home. Wheeler v. State, 826 So. 2d 731 (Miss. 2002).

Even though the defendant was acquitted of two counts of assault, the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary based on evidence that the defendant burst through a door to enter a trailer and that he intended to commit an assault. Jones v. State, 785 So. 2d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence was insufficient to establish that the building which the defendant was alleged to have burglarized was a dwelling within the meaning of the statute where (1) it was uncontradicted that the owner of the home, together with his wife, had permanently ceased to live in the structure and had moved to another county where they were living temporarily in a camper on site while they completed construction work on a new home, (2) there was no evidence even faintly suggesting that the owners had any intention of returning to the structure and resuming their residence there, and (3) there was some testimony that the owners' daughter had been living in the home while she worked as a schoolteacher in the area, but the only evidence concerning the daughter's residency in the home was supplied by her father. Carr v. State, 770 So. 2d 1025 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary where (1) a neighbor saw the defendant and a coperpetrator enter the victim's home, (2) responding police officers saw that the double doors to the home had been forced open while the dead-bolt was still extended to lock the doors, (3) the officers found the defendant and his coperpetrator in the master bedroom and bathroom, (4) the defendant said that they were in the house to get food, but the kitchen was at the opposite end of the house, and (5) in the bedroom, drawers were open and items were scattered on the dresser and bed. Pryor v. State, 771 So. 2d 958 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction where (1) the defendant broke into and entered the victim's house without permission by removing a screen and climbing through a window, and (2) the defendant intended to locate the victim's purse and steal money from her once he found it. Robinson v. State, 757 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary of a dwelling where evidence showed that the defendant was in recent possession of a video cassette recorder stolen from the dwelling. Potts v. State, 755 So. 2d 1196 (Miss. Ct. App. April 25, 2000).

The court refused to affirm a burglary conviction on the theory of constructive breaking where the jury was instructed only on the theory of an actual physical breaking and each theory requires a different set of facts. Genry v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 716 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 14, 1999), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 767 So. 2d 302, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 426 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary, notwithstanding that the home that was entered was only occupied occasionally during the owner's visits to Mississippi, where the owner's daughter lived in the home on a permanent basis while attending high school and had only left the house a few months prior to the burglary, and where testimony revealed that the home contained clothing, a bed, a sofa, a microwave oven and other necessities. Washington v. State, 753 So. 2d 475 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

There was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for burglary where (1) the defendant denied that he broke into the victim's house to steal, and a witness in his behalf testified that the defendant told him that he was going to the victim's house to pick up some money, rather than commit burglary, but (2) the defendant's accomplice indicated that he and the defendant broke into the victim's house with the intention to burglarize it. Brown v. State, 726 So. 2d 248 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction for burglary of an inhabited dwelling. Ward v. State, 726 So. 2d 223 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

3. — Invited entry.

Motion for a directed verdict was properly denied in a case involving burglary of a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because there was sufficient evidence to contradict defendant's assertion that he was invited into a victim's apartment; police noted a shoe print on the front door of the apartment near the knob, and the door frame was cracked. Even if he was invited into the apartment, the breaking and entering element still applied to the victim's bedroom door; the victim testified defendant put his fist into it, there was a hole in that door, and there appeared to be blood smeared on it as well. Jenkins v. State, 995 So. 2d 839 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

4. Indictments.

Defendant's capital murder conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(e) was reversed where his indictment was insufficient to charge him with capital murder or burglary because it failed to assert the underlying offense that comprised the burglary; it also failed to charge him with murder or manslaughter where it omitted the term "unlawfully" or the phrase "without the authority of law." Jackson v. State, — So. 3d —, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 170 (Miss. Apr. 1, 2010).

Jury instruction did not amend the indictment charging defendant with burglary because the indictment charged defendant with breaking into the victim's dwelling, intending to steal the victim's property, while the jury instruction tracked the statutory language and indicated that burglary was the unauthorized entry into the home of another with the intent to commit a crime therein. Because theft was a crime, the indictment properly notified defendant of the crime with which he was charged, and the jury was properly instructed. Alesich v. State, 26 So. 3d 1080 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. 2010).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where a plea was entered to burglary of a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because the record showed that defendant was indicted for this charge; all charges were contained in the same indictment and all offenses were part of a related series of events. Robertson v. State, 959 So. 2d 597 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's motion for post-conviction relief was denied on the basis that an indictment was flawed because this issue was not preserved for review; notwithstanding the bar, the issue was meritless because the indictment stated that a crime occurred "at a certain dwelling owned and occupied," which was sufficient to reflect a burglary of an occupied dwelling, and the transcript of the guilty plea showed that defendant was pleading guilty to this crime, and that he knowing, understandingly, freely, and voluntarily entered a plea to such. Ausbon v. State, 959 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant was invited to a doctor's home where he stole money, he was properly indicted and convicted of burglary under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, because § 97-17-23, by its plain wording, applies to "every person"; an invited guest is a person, and therefore a guest falls within the ambit of § 97-17-23. Sandefer v. State, 952 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Indictment against defendant described the charge of attempted burglary by citing the burglary statute, providing the details of the alleged attempted burglary, and supplying the details concerning the failure to complete the burglary; thus, the indictment against defendant stated the essential facts, and fully notified him of the nature and cause of the charges brought against him, and therefore the trial court did not err in denying the motion to quash the indictment. Brown v. State, 961 So. 2d 720 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant was originally indicted for attempted breaking and entering, but the indictment was properly amended when the amendment was one of form, not substance, and defendant had notice; had the original indictment stated "Attempted Burglary, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-7" or failed to provide "Burglary of a Dwelling, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23," then unquestionably the amendment would have been one of substance rather than form, and the supreme court would have been compelled to reverse the trial court's conviction and sentence, but this indictment, however, was styled and read "Burglary of a Dwelling, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23." Spears v. State, 942 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2006).

Burglary conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 was upheld where acquittal on armed robbery charges, brought under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, did not invoke the doctrine of merger because it was not, as alleged, impossible for defendant to have committed the armed robbery without first committing the burglary. Smallwood v. State, 930 So. 2d 448 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was indicted for attempting to burglar a dwelling house, the trial court committed reversible error by allowing the State to amend the indictment to change the charge from "attempt to break and enter" to "break and enter." Defendant was clearly prejudiced because the defense that he had actually completed the crime was no longer available to him. Spears v. State, 942 So. 2d 812 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), reversed by 942 So. 2d 772, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 656 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's sentence was within the statutory limits of the crime where the indictment was accurate, given that it plainly said that the building was a mobile home on the victim's property and charged that defendant broke into and entered the dwelling for the purpose of carrying away the property of the victim. Triplett v. State, 910 So. 2d 581 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Inmate waived the argument that the inmate's indictment for burglary was defective due to the failure of the indictment to cite to the burglary statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, as this was a technical, nonjurisdictional flaw that the inmate waived with the guilty plea, and the failure to cite to the statute did not hinder the inmate's notice of the charges against the inmate. Battaya v. State, 861 So. 2d 364 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

While the offense of burglary required an intended crime after breaking and entering the dwelling, it was sufficient that the intended crime of larceny was named in the indictment and inclusion of the elements of larceny in the indictment was not required. Webb v. State, 877 So. 2d 399 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 66, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 872 (Miss. 2004).

An indictment for burglary stated with the requisite particularity the underlying crime or intent where the indictment charged the defendant with burglary with the intent to commit assault. Booker v. State, 716 So. 2d 1064 (Miss. 1998).

5. Dwelling house of another.

Trailer which was broken into was a dwelling house, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, because, while the trailer had other purposes as a shop and office, this fact did not prevent the trailer from being a dwelling. The resident had personal possessions at the trailer and the intent to live there, even if not full time. Kirkwood v. State, 53 So. 3d 7 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed in part by, reversed by, remanded in part by 52 So. 3d 1184, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 36 (Miss. 2011).

Motion for a directed verdict was properly denied in a case involving burglary of a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because defendant did not show that he was a resident of a victim's apartment; defendant's name was not listed on any of the bills associated with the apartment, and he did not provide her with financial support. Even though he was a frequent invited guest, this did not rise to the level of being an actual dweller in the apartment. Jenkins v. State, 995 So. 2d 839 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where a hunting cabin was fully furnished and had food items, cooking supplies, appliances, and other living comforts and necessities, it constituted a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23; therefore, post-conviction relief was denied because defendant was properly charged with burglary of a dwelling, and no evidence was presented by the owners of such due to the fact that defendant entered a guilty plea. Young v. State, 952 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a postconviction proceeding following an inmate's conviction for burglary of a dwelling, there was no plain error in the inmate's trial counsel's failure to raise the issue of whether a vacant house that belonged to a nursing home resident was a "dwelling" because there was an intent to maintain the house for dwelling purposes as shown by its listing on the real estate market; thus, the inmate was not denied effective assistance of counsel. Sheffield v. State, 881 So. 2d 249 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2005 Miss. LEXIS 87 (Miss. Feb. 3, 2005).

The defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling was reversed since there was insufficient proof that the site of the burglary qualified as a dwelling where there was no evidence that the property owner ever intended to return to the property to make it his dwelling. Pool v. State, 764 So. 2d 440 (Miss. 2000).

The fact that the refrigerator is unplugged and the stove non-functional does not prevent a building from being classified as a dwelling. Washington v. State, 753 So. 2d 475 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

One cannot be guilty of burglarizing one's own home and, therefore, where the evidence established that the defendant entered his own home, he was entitled to a directed verdict. Mitchell v. State, 720 So. 2d 492 (Ct. App. 1998).

6. Jury instructions.

Trial judge incorrectly instructed the jury that breaking the plane of a door satisfied the force element of burglary of a dwelling because there was no act or force employed to effect an entrance when defendant merely walked through a raised, open garage door to take the victim's purse from her car. Watson v. State, 123 So. 3d 446 (Miss. 2013).

Where an indictment charging defendant with burglary in violation of Miss.

Code Ann. § 97-17-23(1) alleged he entered a dwelling with the intent to commit larceny therein, as he did not request a jury instruction on the elements of larceny, and those elements were not elements of the crime of burglary, the trial court did not plainly err by not giving such an instruction. Conner v. State, 138 So. 3d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), affirmed by 138 So. 3d 143, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 246 (Miss. 2014).

When there was direct evidence that a burglary had been committed but only circumstantial evidence that defendant was the burglar, defendant was entitled, in the absence of a circumstantial evidence instruction, to a two-theory instruction to the jury on what to do when the record supported two or more hypotheses of the crime committed. McInnis v. State, 61 So. 3d 872 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant was entitled to a circumstantial evidence instruction on charges of house burglary and grand larceny. Defendant's testimony that he tried to persuade friends not to commit the burglary and an officer's testimony that defendant was driving a stolen van in which stolen items were found was circumstantial, and no eyewitnesses were presented. Kirkwood v. State, 52 So. 3d 1184 (Miss. 2011).

7. Sentence.

Neither the trial court's decision to sentence defendant to the maximum amount allowed by Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, nor its subsequent decision to deny his plea-withdrawal request was an abuse of discretion because prior to accepting defendant's guilty plea, the trial court thoroughly queried him with regard to the voluntariness of his plea, carefully explained to him that whatever sentencing recommendation the State offered would not have to be accepted, and informed him that the trial court could impose any sentence allowed by law; defendant willfully acknowledged that he fully understood that the State's promise to recommend a sentence carried with it no guarantee that its recommendation would bind the trial court to a particular sentence upon a plea of guilty. Burrough v. State, 9 So. 3d 368 (Miss. 2009).

In a case where defendant was sentenced to eight years in prison with five years of post-release supervision after a guilty plea was entered to the crime of attempted burglary of a dwelling, a post-conviction relief motion was properly dismissed without an evidentiary hearing under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-11(2) because there was no ineffective assistance of counsel where jurisdiction was included in an indictment, the charges were not contradictory, an attempt charge was appropriate, and appellant inmate's other self-serving arguments were wholly unsupported by the record. Moreover, a sentence was not illegal since a suspended sentence was not required in addition to post-release supervision, the sentence imposed was within the range permitted, and the inmate was not misinformed regarding his appellate rights. McKinney v. State, 7 So. 3d 291 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Motion for postconviction relief was properly dismissed without an evidentiary hearing in a case where a guilty plea was entered to the charge of burglary of an occupied dwelling because defendant offered no proof of what advice he was given about parole, other than the assertions made in the motion, and he was not eligible for such due to his conviction; also, defendant was told by a trial court that he was required to serve the full term of his sentence when he entered a guilty plea. Edge v. State, 962 So. 2d 81 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was summarily dismissed since defendant, who was 65 years old and had no prior record, was unable to show that his sentences for burglary and aggravated assault, which were within the ranges in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7 were grossly disproportionate; he could have received 45 years if the maximum terms had been run consecutively, and the facts showed that he broke into a house wielding a pistol and beat a victim. Denton v. State, 955 So. 2d 398 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's sentence of 25 years' imprisonment for burglary of a dwelling was not illegal as the crime carried a maximum sentence of 25 years under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23; defendant was well aware of the sentence the trial court would impose upon him as a result of his guilty plea. Martin v. State, 954 So. 2d 535 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellant was properly sentenced pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 as a habitual offender following an attempted burglary conviction pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because the trial court did not err in admitting his prior felony convictions, after analyzing them under Miss. R. Evid. 403; they were allowed by Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) as appellant's intent was greatly in issue. Carter v. State, 953 So. 2d 224 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by imposing sentences of five years for conspiracy, 25 years for burglary of a dwelling, five years for grand larceny, and 20 years for first degree arson, as these were all the maximum sentences allowed for these crimes. McCollins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's sentences of 30 years and 25 years in prison for his convictions of rape and burglary of a dwelling, to be served consecutively, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment because the trial court imposed sentences within the statutory limits for the crimes, and a threshold comparison of defendant's sentence with his crimes did not raise an inference of gross disproportionality that would trigger the Solem proportionality analysis. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's sentence of 20 years in prison, with 10 years to be suspended and five years of post-release probation, for one count of burglary of an occupied dwelling was not grossly disproportionate where he had been involved in other domestic disturbances prior to the one in question; thus, the 20-year sentence was within the statutory guidelines. Edge v. State, 945 So. 2d 1004 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Inmate plea bargained for a sentence of 15 years for burglary of a dwelling, the sentence as ordered was 25 years with 15 years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections and the remaining 10 years under the post-release provisions with a five-year supervision period; the post-release supervision was to be served concurrent to the inmate's suspended sentence, and thus the inmate's sentence of 15 years to be served on a 25-year sentence was consistent with his plea bargain of 15 years. Craft v. State, 955 So. 2d 384 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Without waiving the procedural bar to the inmate's claim that the inmate's sentence was unconstitutional, the court held that the inmate was properly charged under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-45 and entered a plea of guilty to the escape, and the sentence of three years was well within the maximum prescribed by the statute, which referred to prisoners sentenced to the Mississippi Department of Corrections and allowed a maximum sentence of five years, and thus the inmate was not entitled to post-conviction relief; although the inmate was in custody and on a work program for a county at the time of the escape, the inmate was considered under the Department's jurisdiction for purposes of § 97-9-45 because (1) the inmate's original burglary sentence required imprisonment in the "penitentiary" under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, which term meant any facility under the jurisdiction of the Department pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-3, (2) commitment to any institution within the jurisdiction of the Department was to the Department, not a particular institution pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-110, and (3) under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-541, the Department recommended rules concerning the participation of inmates in work programs. Gardner v. State, 848 So. 2d 900 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Sixteen-year sentence for the crime of burglary of a dwelling was not grossly disproportionate. Alston v. State, 841 So. 2d 201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The defendant was properly sentenced under the statute, notwithstanding that the court mistakenly referred to § 97-17-19, which was repealed and combined into the statute. Lewis v. State, 797 So. 2d 248 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

8. Intent.

Despite the state's argument that, as underlying offenses to the four capital murder charges, the burglary and child abuse allegations in the indictment were not "separate crimes," the state still had to prove every element of burglary and child abuse beyond a reasonable doubt, including intent, however, petitioner state death row inmate's argument that his defense to the intent element was improperly excluded failed because (1) the jury did find intent in the sentencing phase, after hearing the same evidence; (2) the United States Supreme Court had left to the states the responsibility of defining the elements of crime, including mens rea; and (3) neither diminished capacity nor voluntary intoxication were defenses to crimes in Mississippi. Stevens v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69564 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 15, 2008), affirmed by 618 F.3d 489, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 18696 (5th Cir. Miss. 2010).

9. New trial denied.

Despite contradictory evidence, a motion for a new trial was properly denied in a burglary of a dwelling case because the jury's verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence and did not result in an unconscionable injustice. The evidence showed that a victim's apartment was entered by force, defendant also entered a bedroom by force, and the victim was punched in the face and suffered injuries inflicted by defendant. Jenkins v. State, 995 So. 2d 839 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Sufficient Evidence.

1. In general.

In a postconviction proceeding following an inmate's conviction for burglary of a dwelling, there was no plain error in the inmate's counsel's failure to raise the issue of whether a vacant house that belonged to a nursing home resident was a "dwelling" because there was an intent to maintain the house for dwelling purposes as shown by the house's listing on the real estate market; thus, the inmate was not denied effective assistance of counsel. Sheffield v. State, 881 So. 2d 249 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2005 Miss. LEXIS 87 (Miss. Feb. 3, 2005).

A burglary of a utility shed which was connected to a house by a common roof and ceiling, with a breezeway between the two, was considered a burglary of a dwelling. Edwards v. State, 800 So. 2d 454 (Miss. 2001).

House remains dwelling for purposes of burglary prosecution notwithstanding lengthy stay of resident of house in nursing home, at least so long as all of resident's personal possessions remain in house and resident intends to return to house when health permits. Course v. State, 469 So. 2d 80 (Miss. 1985).

Prosecution for burglarizing dwelling house lies for breaking and entering of week-end home which has been regularly used on alternate weekends for 8 years and in which food, clothing and other necessities have been left. Gillum v. State, 468 So. 2d 856 (Miss. 1985).

A prosecution for burglarizing a dwelling house will not lie where the complained of act is the breaking and entering of a motel room; in such a case, defendant should be indicted for breaking and entering a building other than a dwelling house. Robinson v. State, 364 So. 2d 1131 (Miss. 1978).

2. Sufficient Evidence.

Witness testified that defendant was one of the three individuals who were loading the stolen items into a car at the victim's home and who fled at a high rate of speed when they spotted him; that was direct evidence that defendant was not at his grandfather's home, but rather was actively participating in the burglary. Thus, the fact that defendant was not at his grandfather's house would have been admitted through the witness's testimony, regardless of an alleged accomplice's inconsistent statement. Therefore, even without the accomplice's statement, the evidence was sufficient to support the jury verdict finding defendant guilty of burglary. Long v. State, 934 So. 2d 313 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 610 (Miss. 2006).

(2) Any person who shall be convicted of breaking and entering a church, synagogue, temple or other established place of worship with intent to commit some crime therein shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than fourteen (14) years.

1. In general.

Fact that Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(2) and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-43(2) provide harsher penalties for crimes committed in places of worship does not amount to government endorsement of religion; therefore, they do not violate the Establishment Clause. Dimaio v. State, 951 So. 2d 581 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

A Goodwill Industries box in the parking lot of a shopping mall was a structure encompassed under this section. Goldman v. State, 741 So. 2d 949 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence is sufficient to support verdict of guilty on charge of burglary where defendant confessed to crime after having been read his Miranda rights and having signed written waiver of those rights. Turbo Trucking Co. v. Rollins, 511 So. 2d 148 (Miss. 1987).

Voluntary intoxication is not defense to burglary charge. Cummings v. State, 465 So. 2d 993 (Miss. 1985).

A prosecution for burglarizing a dwelling house will not lie where the complained of act is the breaking and entering of a motel room; in such a case, defendant should be indicted for breaking and entering a building other than a dwelling house. Robinson v. State, 364 So. 2d 1131 (Miss. 1978).

Under the statute defining burglary as the breaking and entering of a building with the intent to steal or commit a felony, any act of force necessary to enter, however slight, constitutes a "breaking". Branning v. State, 222 So. 2d 667 (Miss. 1969).

Burglary of a store building is a felony. McCullum v. State, 197 So. 2d 252 (Miss. 1967).

A building in process of construction and nearing completion, although designed and intended for occupancy as a dwelling house when completed, but which at the time of the burglary had not yet been occupied, was not a dwelling house in contemplation of Code 1942, §§ 2036 and 2038, and the offense could be properly charged only under Code 1942, § 2043. Watson v. State, 254 Miss. 82, 179 So. 2d 826 (1965).

The crime of burglary consists of two elements, (1) the burglarious breaking and entering of the house or building, and (2) the felonious intent to commit a felony therein. Faust v. State, 221 Miss. 668, 74 So. 2d 817 (1954).

The crime of burglary consists of two essentials elements, the burglarious breaking and entering the house and the felonious intent to commit some crime therein and it is the criminal breaking without the consent of the owner, for the purpose of taking property stored in a building that constituted the corpus delicti of burglary. Holderfield v. State, 215 Miss. 564, 61 So. 2d 385 (1952).

Except in cases of constructive breaking where an entry is effected by fraud or intimidation, there can be no breaking, and therefore there is no burglary where the occupant of the house, or an agent or servant having authority, expressly or impliedly invites or consents to the entry, and the fact that one who enters with the consent of the owner commits a larceny after the entry does not make him guilty of burglary. Holderfield v. State, 215 Miss. 564, 61 So. 2d 385 (1952).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2043] a breaking and entering is necessary to constitute the crime of burglary. Clanton v. State, 211 Miss. 568, 52 So. 2d 349 (1951).

The essentials to prove the crime of burglary are a breaking and entering the building, and showing that it was done with intent to steal therein or to commit a felony. Gross v. State, 191 Miss. 383, 2 So. 2d 818 (1941).

By "breaking" is meant any act of force, regardless of how slight, necessary to be used in entering the building-the turning of a knob, a slight push to further open a door, the raising of a latch, or like act, being sufficient. Gross v. State, 191 Miss. 383, 2 So. 2d 818 (1941).

Transaction between employees of owner of premises burglarized and third person did not amount to consent to commission of the crime. Gentry v. State, 102 Miss. 630, 59 So. 853 (1912).

One who is let into a building by a decoy or detective in the service of an acting for the owner is not guilty of burglary. Strait v. State, 77 Miss. 693, 27 So. 617 (1900).

2. Indictment.

In a case involving burglary of a nondwelling, an indictment failed to allege all of the essential elements of the crime; only the first element of the crime was cited in the indictment because there was no mention of any valuables kept in the house or a citation to the particular crime that defendant allegedly intended to commit. Therefore, the indictment was void as violative of the federal and state constitutional provisions relating to the right to notice of criminal charges. Gales v. State, 131 So. 3d 1238 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Where the original indictment identified the inmate by name and stated that he unlawfully, wilfully, feloniously, and burglariously broke into and entered a storage shed, the indictment was not defective as it tracked the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33, and a subsequent amendment to change a section number did not require the indictment to be returned to the grand jury. Ford v. State, 911 So. 2d 1007 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Language of the indictment explicitly mirrored the burglary statute of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33, as it stated that defendant did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously break and enter a trailer having the intent to commit an assault therein and burglarize it; the language "intent to commit assault" was held to be valid in an indictment to depict the predicate crime for burglary, and it was not necessary for the State to supply the elements of assault, as it was used as the underlying intent crime of burglary. Lancaster v. State, 878 So. 2d 140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 878 So. 2d 67, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 916 (Miss. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 543 U.S. 1191, 125 S. Ct. 1406, 161 L. Ed. 2d 196, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2140, 73 U.S.L.W. 3513 (2005).

An indictment for burglary was adequate where it was inartfully drawn but contained all of the required words. Harrison v. State, 722 So. 2d 681 (Miss. 1998).

It is not necessary under the burglary statute to allege in the indictment the value of the property stolen. Faust v. State, 221 Miss. 668, 74 So. 2d 817 (1954).

Where an indictment charging burglary by stealing of automobile from motor company stated that the accused kept the automobile for use, transportation, deposit, sale and delivery, this did not impose upon the state the burden of proving all five purposes for which the automobile was kept. Strickland v. State, 220 Miss. 71, 70 So. 2d 1 (1954).

Where an indictment for burglary of store building failed to allege an intent to steal, it was fatally defective requiring reversal of conviction. Taylor v. State, 214 Miss. 263, 58 So. 2d 664 (1952).

Where an indictment for burglary of a store building omitted an allegation of intent to steal, the defendant's failure to demur to the indictment did not constitute waiver of his right to raise the question on his motion for a new trial and on appeal since the intent to steal was an essential element of the crime. Taylor v. State, 214 Miss. 263, 58 So. 2d 664 (1952).

This section [Code 1942, § 2043] does not require the indictment to state the value of the personal property intended to be stolen. Lewis v. State, 212 Miss. 775, 55 So. 2d 475 (1951).

Indictment charging breaking and entering a high school building, "the property of Prentiss Consolidated School District," should also have charged that the building in question was the property of the school trustees (naming them) and their successors in office, for the use and benefit of the Prentiss Consolidated School District. Brown v. State, 209 Miss. 636, 48 So. 2d 131 (1950).

Indictment for burglary under this section [Code 1942, § 2043] is not demurrable on ground that it does not allege what kind of money was taken, whether greenback bills, silver dollars, or good and lawful money of the United States of America. Bone v. State, 207 Miss. 868, 43 So. 2d 571 (1949).

Indictment charging that named defendant did wilfully, feloniously and burglariously break and enter storehouse of lumber company, in which goods, merchandise and other things of value were kept, the property of said lumber company, with intent of named defendant then and there to take, steal and carry away sum of $10 in money, or value of $10 in money, the property of said lumber company, found and kept for use and sale in said storehouse, charges crime of burglary and demurrer attacking it is properly overruled. Bone v. State, 207 Miss. 868, 43 So. 2d 571 (1949).

Indictment charging accused with feloniously and burglariously entering store and stealing and carrying away certain property "wilfully and feloniously" held not defective as failing to charge felonious intent in commission of the larceny. Colburn v. State, 175 Miss. 704, 166 So. 920 (1936).

Indictment charging burglary held not defective because it did not charge whether crime was committed in day or nighttime. Colburn v. State, 175 Miss. 704, 166 So. 920 (1936).

Indictment containing name of county in caption and charging that offense was committed in "said county and State" held to sufficiently charge that cotton house was situated in county. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

Indictment charging that defendant "did wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously and with force and arms burglariously break and enter" held sufficient as against contention that there was no verb charging action with reference to burglary. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

Indictment charging accused entered building with intent to take, steal, and carry away certain property found therein, charges burglary and will not support conviction for larceny. Fournier v. State, 96 Miss. 417, 50 So. 502 (1909).

An indictment under the statute is not bad because it does not pursue literally the language of the statute if the words used be synonymous with those in the statute. Roberts v. State, 55 Miss. 421 (1877).

3. —Joinder of offenses.

Where an indictment for burglary charged larceny not as a substantive offense but as demonstrative of burglarious intent, it was erroneous upon conviction to impose a separate sentence for larceny, and the sentence for larceny would be deleted as surplusage, without affecting the sentence for burglary. Bullock v. State, 222 So. 2d 692 (Miss. 1969).

Burglary and larceny may be charged in the same count of an indictment. Brown v. State, 103 Miss. 664, 60 So. 727 (1913).

Assault and battery committed in the house may be so joined with burglary. Smith v. State, 57 Miss. 822 (1880).

It is a general rule that two crimes cannot be charged in the same count of an indictment; but as an exception, larceny and burglary may be joined in a single count, and in such case the jury may acquit of burglary and convict of larceny; but if they return a general verdict of guilty, it will be regarded as a conviction of burglary alone. Roberts v. State, 55 Miss. 421 (1877); Harris v. State, 61 Miss. 304 (1883).

4. —Allegations as to ownership.

In an indictment for burglary the allegations as to ownership of the title to the building constitute surplusage, and, insofar as the burglary is concerned, the occupant of the building at the time of the burglary is the owner, and no such particularization of the description of the title of the building is required. Taylor v. State, 214 Miss. 263, 58 So. 2d 664 (1952).

Indictment charging ownership of building burglarized in a partnership insufficient unless names of several partners set forth. Wright v. State, 130 Miss. 603, 94 So. 716 (1923).

Indictment charging defendant burglarized railroad car held insufficient for not alleging ownership of the car. State v. Ellis, 102 Miss. 541, 59 So. 841 (1912).

It is necessary to allege the ownership of the building burglarized and to prove it as laid. James v. State, 77 Miss. 370, 26 So. 929, 78 Am. St. R. 527 (1900).

When a corporation is alleged to be the owner there must be proof of the existence of the corporation. Proof, however, that it is known and acting as a corporation is sufficient. James v. State, 77 Miss. 370, 26 So. 929, 78 Am. St. R. 527 (1900).

5. —Variance between indictment and proof.

In a business burglary case, the indictment, despite misspelling the name of the store where the burglary took place, was sufficient. Cridiso v. State, 956 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2007).

The fact that the indictment charges an intent in the burglar to steal the property of one person and the proof shows the actual stealing of the property of another is immaterial, "if the conviction be of burglary." Harris v. State, 61 Miss. 304 (1883).

6. Evidence, generally.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions for a directed verdict and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict for the offense of burglary of a business because the jury was presented with video surveillance depicting a man carrying the stolen bottles to the trunk of his vehicle using what appeared to be a bedspread or sheet; defendant's girlfriend described how defendant took the bedspread off the hotel bed and went outside of the hotel room, and then the following day, she observed many unopened bottles of alcohol in the trunk of his car; and an officer testified that defendant's vehicle matched the vehicle seen in the surveillance video. Stewart v. State, 130 So. 3d 1158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Evidence supported defendant's multiple convictions of automobile burglary because footage of a surveillance video showed his truck parked next to or near the victims' vehicles and defendant illegally entering those vehicles and the victims described the damage to their vehicles and the items taken from their vehicles. Additionally, a security officer observed a vehicle pull into a parking lot, defendant exit the vehicle, and look in the windows of other vehicles, one of which was burglarized. Bunch v. State, 123 So. 3d 484 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

In addition to a witness's testimony that she saw defendant on a surveillance video, defendant's conviction for business burglary, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1), was supported by testimony from the police officers who found stolen stocking caps in defendant's pocket, as well as testimony from two eyewitnesses who identified defendant once he was apprehended. Smith v. State, 28 So. 3d 678 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of burglary of a building, given that (1) the jury was entitled to believe whomever's story it found most credible, (2) a witness testified that he and defendant agreed that the witness would steal a public address (PA) system for defendant in return for other goods, (3) defendant drove the witness to the office where the burglary occurred and they later returned to defendant's house with the stolen goods, (4) the PA was eventually recovered from defendant's mother's house, and (5) the witness's version of events was consistent with the testimony of a deputy; the court could not find that allowing defendant's conviction to stand sanctioned an unconscionable injustice. Thompson v. State, 995 So. 2d 831 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a burglary conviction where defendant was seen near the burglarized business beforehand, the keys to the stolen truck were missing from the business, defendant was in possession of the stolen truck's keys, his explanation for his possession of the stolen truck, that it was his uncle's truck, was demonstrably false as the vehicle identification number clearly showed that the truck belonged to the burglarized business, and the inference to be drawn from defendant's possession of the stolen truck was strong where he was found in possession of the truck only six days after the burglary occurred, the license plate had been replaced by a stolen, out-of-state, license plate, he gave several aliases when confronted by the police, and his explanation for possessing the truck was demonstrably false. Presley v. State, 994 So. 2d 191 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's motions for a directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict were denied in a case alleging the burglary of a storehouse because the evidence was sufficient for the conviction; police identified defendant through his mannerisms, even though a towel was covering his face, clothes similar to the ones worn were found at the residence of defendant's girlfriend, a similar towel was found, and a large amount of cash was discovered. Jackson v. State, 943 So. 2d 746 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for business burglary because defendant was found in the proximity of the store shortly after the burglary was discovered, over 90 cartons of cigarettes were found in defendant's vehicle, and the cartons matched nearly exactly the inventory taken from the store. Cridiso v. State, 956 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant was convicted of burglary of a building, the trial court had not erred in admitting certain photographs into evidence because the documents provided by the State during discovery effectively put defendant on notice of the existence of the photographs. Similarly, according to the prosecution's undisputed recollection of events, defendant was given an opportunity to view the photographs on the morning of trial. Powell v. State, 925 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 183 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant was properly convicted under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1) where the jury could conclude that defendant broke the lock on the owner's storage shed, entered without her permission, and stole her furniture; the jury could believe the State's evidence that defendant was in possession of stolen goods, in close proximity to the house, just after the burglary occurred. Bowie v. State, 921 So. 2d 378 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 926 So. 2d 922, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 158 (Miss. 2006).

Witness testified that she saw defendant pull over to the side of the road outside the victim's hunting camp, retrieve an air conditioner from the ditch, and place the air conditioner into the trunk of the car; through that testimony, an inference was made by the jury that defendant had previously removed the air conditioner and placed it by the road for later retrieval. Thus, the evidence was sufficient to prove that defendant committed a break-in and his conviction on count I for burglary of a storehouse was appropriate. Forkner v. State, 902 So. 2d 615 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 901 So. 2d 1273, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 345 (Miss. 2005).

Reasonable inferences from the State's evidence established that defendant and his accomplice had broken the glass door of the store, entered the store, stolen the merchandise, placed it in the back of the truck, driven away, and were making their getaway when they were fortuitously stopped for driving with a burned-out headlight. Thus, a logical inference could be made from the evidence for the jury to find that defendant had committed a breaking and entering of a store with the intent to steal, sufficient to find defendant guilty of the crime of burglary of a business. Mann v. State, 892 So. 2d 267 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 892 So. 2d 824, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 69 (Miss. 2005).

Evidence presented to the jury included the statement that defendant did enter the school illegally and assist others in entering the school, and it also included the testimony of a witness who was with defendant inside the school; the witness's testimony and the statement placing defendant inside the school were sufficient evidence presented to the jury for it to reasonably find defendant guilty, and defendant failed to prove that no rational jury could find him guilty on the evidence presented. Hunter v. State, 878 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of burglary because (1) all the elements of burglary, including breaking and entering and evidence from which the jury could find the necessary intent to commit a crime once inside the business, were shown by credible evidence to have occurred; (2) defendant's blood matched the samples taken from the store where the break-in occurred and the ATM machine was stolen; and (3) the only evidence weighing against that persuasive proof was defendant's own self-serving statement that he was attacked by individuals wielding broken bottles that was not corroborated by any unbiased witness or objective demonstrative evidence. Lee v. State, 869 So. 2d 1063 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where an officer investigating the report of a car break-in at a car lot saw defendant at the lot at 4:30 a.m., defendant fled when he approached, and a manager of the lot testified that the auto part found in defendant's pocket came from one of the cars on the lot, the evidence, despite some inconsistencies, had been sufficient to convict defendant of burglary, and his motion to set aside the jury's verdict was properly denied. Fields v. State, 879 So. 2d 481 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 882 So. 2d 234, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 992 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant where defendant's arrest was lawful, based upon witness information and officer corroboration, and the jury could believe the State's testimony that defendant intended to commit a crime by breaking into the vehicles, even though defendant claimed that he was looking for a phone. Jackson v. State, 845 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where defendant was arrested near the scene of a vehicle burglary, the theft was reported soon after defendant's arrest, defendant did not conceal the stolen items when confronted by police, and defendant had no explanation for being in possession of the stereo equipment, there was sufficient evidence presented to support a conviction for automobile burglary. Cheeks v. State, 843 So. 2d 87 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In defendant's burglary trial, the employee's identification of defendant at a later lineup was not 100 percent positive, although the employee concluded that defendant matched the suspect, and police later stopped defendant in the same area, where several burglaries had occurred, and found several speakers in defendant's car that generally matched the stolen speakers; thus, the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict, and defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied. Coleman v. State, 841 So. 2d 1170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for auto burglary where (1) a police officer testified that he saw the defendant enter a truck in the early morning hours, (2) the defendant's coperpetrator testified that both he and the defendant entered the truck with the intent to steal a stereo system, and (3) the owner of the truck testified that he did not know the defendant and did not give him permission to enter the truck. Hall v. State, 760 So. 2d 817 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction, notwithstanding the defendant's denial of any involvement in the burglary at issue, where (1) the two coperpetrators implicated the defendant in the burglary, (2) a neighbor saw three people in the burglarized store, and (3) recently stolen items from the store were found at the apartment of the defendant. James v. State, 756 So. 2d 850 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary of a building other than a dwelling where (1) the defendant drove himself and his coperpetrator to the rear of a store, (2) the coperpetrator began to break into the store while the defendant acted as a look-out, and (3) the defendant fled when the police arrived. Henderson v. State, 756 So. 2d 811 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary of a building other than a dwelling where (1) the activities seen and heard by an off-duty officer were the efforts necessary to push an air conditioner out of an opening onto the floor inside the building and (2) the defendant then took advantage of that opening to begin an entry into the premises for the purpose of committing a theft once inside; the fact that the defendant did not entirely succeed in his effort to enter the building was not helpful to his case as the slightest physical entry into the previously secure enclosure was sufficient to satisfy the entering component of burglary. Henderson v. State, 756 So. 2d 811 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary where (1) a stolen safe and its contents were found in the defendant's bedroom five days after a restaurant was broken into, (2) having performed renovations at the restaurant, the defendant testified that he knew where the safe was located in the restaurant, (3) the defendant called inquiring about additional work at the restaurant shortly before the burglary occurred, and (4) a witness testified that she saw the defendant carrying a heavy box-shaped item into his bedroom late one night. Smith v. State, 749 So. 2d 1179 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction for burglary of an automobile. Ward v. State, 726 So. 2d 223 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for auto burglary where (1) the defendant's palm print was found on the victim's van near the place where entry was made, and (2) there was also forensic testimony and time proximity of relevant events which connected the defendant to the crime. Rice v. State, 723 So. 2d 1239 (Ct. App. 1998).

Mere support for the State's hypothesis in a case based entirely on circumstantial evidence is not enough, because the evidence must be of such quality as to rise to the level of excluding every reasonable hypothesis other than that of guilt. Murphy v. State, 566 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. 1990).

Officer who arrests burglary suspect may testify at trial that suspect was arrested pursuant to outstanding arrest warrant, where no mention is made of charges upon which warrant is based. Brown v. State, 483 So. 2d 328 (Miss. 1986).

It is reversible error to take up major portion of burglary trial in introducing evidence of no relevance whatever to guilt of defendant. Weaver v. State, 481 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 1985).

Denying accused on redirect examination opportunity to explain what he meant in note to prisoner arrested with him during burglarizing of bar, was not error where any prejudicial effect which may have resulted was removed by testimony of accused at other times during trial which explained purpose of note in detail. Standard Oil Co. v. Westmoreland, 291 So. 2d 744 (Miss. 1974).

There was no error in permitting narcotics officer to testify about putting a transmitting "bug", or device on the person of the state witness and listening to conversation between the witness and defendant, notwithstanding contention that no evidence was offered to show that state witness consented to "bugging" or scheme to hear conversation, and the further argument that no recording was made of conversation and, in any case, it was not a confession. Moore v. State, 291 So. 2d 187 (Miss. 1974).

Under the decisions of this State, it is well settled that testimony of an accomplice, although entirely without corroboration, will support a verdict of conviction. Moore v. State, 291 So. 2d 187 (Miss. 1974).

Where a sheriff took a bottle of wine in lawful custody pending the outcome of a trial on the charge of unlawful possession of the liquor and this bottle was subject of larceny by the defendant, a showing that the defendant broke into courthouse with intent to remove the bottle would be sufficient for conviction of burglary. Faust v. State, 221 Miss. 668, 74 So. 2d 817 (1954).

Where seed stolen was mixed with other seed, state was not required to prove how much was stolen at particular theft, since value of seed was not material. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

Testimony of person who early in the morning following the theft bought the seed as to statements made showing that accused had assisted in breaking into house and taking away the seed held admissible. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction. Stokes v. State, 138 Miss. 701, 103 So. 365 (1925).

7. —Of breaking and entering.

Reasonable, fair-minded jurors could have found defendant and codefendant guilty of burglary of a building other than a dwelling in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1) because the State showed that they were on the victim's property without his permission; defendant admitted that he had hidden some of the items he had taken from the victim's property, and an investigator with the county sheriff's department, who had interviewed defendant and codefendant, testified that a photograph showed what appeared to be defendant opening the door to the back porch of the victim's with his right sleeve enclosing his hand and opined that defendant was trying not to leave fingerprints. Brown v. State, 48 So. 3d 614 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Appellate court reversed defendant's conviction for burglary in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33 as the building that defendant entered was an open, three-sided shed such that there was no actual breaking, an essential element of burglary, and there was no evidence of constructive breaking because defendant did not use deceit to gain access to the shed. Hill v. State, 929 So. 2d 338 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant possessed stolen property within a day or two of a burglary, tried to hide the property, and offered no explanation whatsoever for having it, the inference of burglary was sufficient to support the conviction. McQuirter v. State, 862 So. 2d 551 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's act of entering a store constituted a "breaking" even though store's front door may already have been propped open when defendant arrived, as his passage through the door was the "act or force," however slight, employed to effect an entrance. Chaney v. State, 802 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The defendant was properly found to have constructively broken into a store where, knowing that the store was closed for business, he shrewdly gained entry by using the fabricated excuse that he was having trouble with his vehicle and needed to telephone his employer. Genry v. State, 767 So. 2d 302 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Evidence was sufficient to show breaking and entering where the defendant and his accomplice entered a Goodwill Industries box in the parking lot of a shopping mall by crawling up a chute used for depositing donated items. Goldman v. State, 741 So. 2d 949 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Burglary having been established by proof of breaking and entering with felonious intent, positive proof as to the identity of an article alleged to have been stolen is not necessary; but when such article is offered in evidence, there must be proof warranting a finding that it was taken from the burglarized premises. Lee v. State, 236 Miss. 716, 112 So. 2d 254 (1959).

Proof showing that lock of house was broken, the door opened, and seed taken away without consent of owner, held to establish corpus delicti without showing that accused did the breaking. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

Evidence only that the lock of the door out of which accused came had been tampered with was insufficient to establish breaking and entry. Griffin v. State, 111 Miss. 335, 71 So. 572 (1916).

8. —Of intent.

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict during a trial for burglary of a business, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1), because the evidence showed that defendant entered a meat processing business with the unlawful intent to steal meat; even though the back door of the business was left open during deer hunting season so that customers could leave their field-dressed deer in the cooler, defendant entered with a purpose outside of the owner's consent. Fulgham v. State, 12 So. 3d 558 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

For purposes of burglary of an automobile, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to properly infer that defendant had the intent to steal when he broke into and entered the automobile in question because the evidence showed that: (1) after examining the passenger side, he found nothing to his liking; (2) he proceeded to the driver's side to continue his search; (3) when confronted by the owner's husband, the defendant neither apologized for being inside the automobile, nor explained that he thought it belonged to someone else; and (4) instead, the defendant refused to exit and informed the husband that he was taking the automobile. Riley v. State, 11 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. June 25, 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to show the defendant's intent to commit a crime after breaking into a church, notwithstanding his assertion that he broke in merely to use the telephone, where a cassette player was missing from the church and a witness testified that he saw stereo equipment in the back of the defendant's car that did not belong to a car. Harrison v. State, 722 So. 2d 681 (Miss. 1998).

9. —Of value.

For purposes of burglary of an automobile, the State did not fail to present evidence that the automobile in question contained anything of value because the jury could have reasonably inferred that the automobile contained at least two seats, a steering wheel, a gear shift, acceleration and brake pedals, and other items necessary for operation of the automobile. Riley v. State, 11 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. June 25, 2009).

Evidence consisting of the defendant's palm print on a vending machine in a vocational complex that was burglarized was insufficient to support a conviction for business burglary under this section, since the palm print answered only the question of identity, and there was no additional evidence establishing that the defendant was the person who unlawfully entered the building with the intent to commit a crime. DeLoach v. State, 658 So. 2d 875 (Miss. 1995).

10. —Of fingerprints.

A fingerprint as the sole proof of guilt in a criminal prosecution is insufficient. Fingerprint evidence must be coupled with some other evidence, especially when the fingerprint was not found at the crime scene but on some object away from the scene. The State must corroborate the physical evidence with other proof of guilt. Thus, the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction of the defendant for burglary where a grocery store was burglarized sometime during the evening or early morning hours when the store was closed, an unidentified man was seen dropping the items stolen from the grocery store and running from a police officer at 4:00 a.m. that morning, the defendant's fingerprints were found on 3 of 6 stolen cartons of cigarettes recovered by the police department, and these cartons were generally inaccessible to the public during business hours at the grocery store. Corbin v. State, 585 So. 2d 713 (Miss. 1991).

Although fingerprint evidence alone will not support conviction for burglary, such evidence coupled with evidence of other circumstances tending to reasonably exclude hypothesis that print was impressed at time other than that of crime will support conviction. Wooten v. State, 513 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. 1987).

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction for burglary where fingerprints of defendant impressed into fresh blood lifted from both inside and outside of broken glass, thus indicating that they were left after glass was broken and not before, and defendant had injuries consistent with blood and broken glass which coincided in time with break-in, and had misrepresented to police officers his name and circumstances of his injuries. Wooten v. State, 513 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. 1987).

11. —Of possession or disposition of stolen property.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict because the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for business burglary, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1); the State presented evidence that fans and a grill found in defendant's truck were the property of a mental health center. McMillan v. State, 6 So. 3d 444 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Mere possession of stolen articles, by itself, is not enough to convict a person for the crime of burglary. Thus, there was insufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for business burglary, involving the theft of chain saws from a sawmill, where the evidence showed only that the building containing the chain saws was locked at the close of business, several hours later the defendant was in the area and he came into possession of the chain saws, and that he eventually sold the chain saws, and there was no evidence, such as eyewitnesses, fingerprints, or footprints, linking the defendant to the breaking and entering of the building. Murphy v. State, 566 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. 1990).

Evidence was sufficient to support guilty verdict of accessory after the fact of larceny where defendant assisted in disposition of items of personal property taken in course of burglary. Buckley v. State, 511 So. 2d 1354 (Miss. 1987).

Unexplained possession of property which has recently been stolen in burglary is prima facie, although by no means conclusive, evidence of guilt of burglary defendant. Weaver v. State, 481 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 1985).

There was ample testimony to sustain jury's verdict where defendant was discovered with watch identified as the make taken from burglarized store, jury could have reasonably questioned genuineness of invoices of watches introduced by the defendant, and, moreover, officers, by means of "bug" device, heard conversation between state's witness and defendant in which purchase of watch with marked money was made, and officers later found marked money on premises where conversation took place. Moore v. State, 291 So. 2d 187 (Miss. 1974).

12. —Of opportunity.

In a prosecution for attempted burglary, the trial court committed reversible error in allowing police officers to testify regarding evidence of another burglary found on the defendant's person at the time of his arrest for the attempted burglary where the testimony lacked any permissible probative value other than to imply that the defendant was guilty of the attempted burglary since he had apparently taken part in a prior burglary as well, the trial judge failed to conduct a probative value versus prejudicial effects test under Rule 403, Miss. R. Ev., and no limiting instruction was given to the jury regarding the testimony of the alleged prior offense. Watts v. State, 635 So. 2d 1364 (Miss. 1994).

The evidence was sufficient to support a conviction for burglary of a store where an eyewitness stated that he saw the defendant walk across the street from the store with 2 grocery bags and a fingerprint expert testified that the defendant's fingerprints matched those lifted from the scene of the burglary. Griffin v. State, 607 So. 2d 1197 (Miss. 1992).

Testimony placing accused within seventeen miles of place of burglary at a cafe on direct highway to place of burglary is admissible in evidence when accused claims to have been in different city at time of burglary. Bone v. State, 207 Miss. 868, 43 So. 2d 571 (1949).

Testimony of officer describing car and its contents which officer saw on street on night of burglary near building burglarized and which he saw following afternoon in garage in another city where defendant had been placed in jail, claiming that neither he nor car had left city on night of burglary, is admissible in prosecution for burglary even though officer had no search warrant. Bone v. State, 207 Miss. 868, 43 So. 2d 571 (1949).

13 —Of prior convictions or other crimes.

Defendant's conviction for burglary in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1) was inappropriate because the prosecutor impermissibly used defendant's prior conviction for attempted grand larceny as evidence of defendant's predisposition to steal to prove the element of intent of the indicted offense. Using the evidence for such a purpose ran afoul of the prohibition on the use of predisposition evidence found in Miss. R. Evid. 404(a). Robinson v. State, 42 So. 3d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

A trial court committed reversible error in admitting 2 prior burglary convictions into evidence under Rule 609(a)(2), Miss. R. Ev. in order to impeach the testimony of the defendant where the prior convictions were 7 years old, the defendant was on trial for burglary and therefore the prior convictions involved identical crimes, the defendant's testimony was crucial to the defense since he was the only defense witness, and though credibility was a central issue, burglary is not necessarily a crime affecting veracity and therefore the low probative value of the convictions on the issue of credibility did not raise the need for the evidence. Townsend v. State, 605 So. 2d 767 (Miss. 1992).

Allowing state to introduce in burglary prosecution evidence connecting defendant to burglary for which defendant has not being charged as reversible error. Griffin v. State, 482 So. 2d 233 (Miss. 1986).

14. —Confessions.

There was no physical evidence linking defendant to the burglary but the jury was provided with physical evidence connecting his accomplice to the crime. Then, the jury was told that defendant was able to identify his accomplice close to the crime scene when said identification had already been suppressed due to the violation of defendant's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights at the time of his arrest (Miranda violation); thus, the identification testimony by the officer was unquestionably prejudicial, the prosecutor's closing argument further compounded the problem by linking the physical evidence connecting the accomplice to the crime to defendant, and the trial court committed reversible error in denying defendant's motions for a mistrial and for a new trial. Carpenter v. State, 910 So. 2d 528 (Miss. 2005).

Evidence was more than sufficient to support defendant's guilt for the crimes with which he was charged where the law enforcement officers stated that defendant gave incriminating statements in which he acknowledged that he had burglarized several automobiles, gave descriptions of those vehicles, and described what items he took from them. Stewart v. State, 879 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

When accused is deprived of no constitutional right by failure of trial court to furnish, or offer to furnish, an attorney to defend him on trial in state court for burglary, trial court is not in error in admitting confession of guilt where it is done without objection on part of defendant during his trial, unless it is manifestly given under duress or is obviously untrue. Odom v. State, 205 Miss. 572, 37 So. 2d 300 (1948), cert. denied, 336 U.S. 932, 69 S. Ct. 747, 93 L. Ed. 1092 (1949).

Upon the trial of a defendant indicted for burglary testimony that the outer door of the building had been broken and the cash drawer therein opened, even in the absence of direct evidence that anything had been stolen, is a sufficient showing of an intent to steal and of the corpus delicti to authorize the admission in evidence of defendant's confession. Brown v. State, 85 Miss. 27, 37 So. 497 (1904).

15. Questions for jury.

In a prosecution for burglary under this section, the trial court did not err in denying an instruction on the lesser included offense of trespass where the defendant argued only that he was not guilty because he had permission to be on the property and that the crime charged should have been "house burglary" rather than "business burglary," and therefore no defense was presented that he was guilty only of trespass. Wilson v. State, 639 So. 2d 1326 (Miss. 1994).

In prosecution for burglary by stealing of automobile the question of truth or falsity of testimony of defendant's accomplice was for jury. Strickland v. State, 220 Miss. 71, 70 So. 2d 1 (1954).

In prosecution for burglary and larceny, the testimony of the owner of the building was a question for the determination of the jury under proper instructions as to whether or not he had given the accused consent to enter the building. Holderfield v. State, 215 Miss. 564, 61 So. 2d 385 (1952).

Whether defendant confessed to burglary before or after punishment by officers was administered to him is question for jury under conflicting evidence. Scarborough v. State, 204 Miss. 487, 37 So. 2d 748 (1948).

Weight of testimony of accomplice in burglary held for jury, where there was no evidence as to accused's reputation for veracity, accomplice was not impeached, and no evidence of alibi. Brownlee v. State, 165 Miss. 193, 147 So. 339 (1933).

In burglary prosecution, whether goods, wares, and merchandise, were kept in store for use and sale alleged, held for jury. Osser v. State, 165 Miss. 680, 145 So. 754 (1933).

Where a defendant had been indicted for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33, the State was not entitled to lesser-included jury instruction for accessory after the fact. Only a defendant, not the State could request a lesser-included offense instruction, and accessory after the fact was not a lesser-included offense to burglary. Hall v. State, 127 So. 3d 202 (Miss. 2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant a jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of trespass during his trial for business burglary because if the jury had believed defendant's testimony that he was not present when a storage locker was burglarized, it would have believed that he never entered the storage locker and had not committed trespass. Gray v. State, 931 So. 2d 627 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was convicted of burglary of a building, the trial court had not erred in denying his proposed instruction on eyewitness testimony because defendant's identification and subsequent conviction did not rest entirely upon the testimony of a single witness and the State presented evidence that property stolen from the store was recovered from defendant's truck, which provided additional independent evidence of his involvement in the crime. Powell v. State, 925 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 183 (Miss. 2006).

Portion of defendant's requested instruction on identification testimony was consistent with the Mississippi Supreme Court's ruling in Davis v. State, and could have been granted, but the trial court's substituted instruction did not constitute reversible error, as the trial court properly instructed jury it had to acquit defendant, unless the State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the burglary. Coleman v. State, 841 So. 2d 1170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

When a defendant's requested instruction is a proper statement of the law and is the only instruction that presents his or her theory of the case, it should be granted. Murphy v. State, 566 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. 1990).

It was not error for trial court to submit to jury supplemental instruction which defined "breaking" element of crime of burglary, although danger that supplemental instruction might cause jury to single out and focus upon point presented in it and give it undue importance was recognized, where trial judge added to supplemental instruction sentence stating that jury was to read and consider that instruction along with other instructions. Wright v. State, 512 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 1987).

Burglary defendant is entitled to instruction to effect that uncorroborated testimony of accomplice should be viewed with great caution and suspicion where without testimony of accomplice there is nothing to indicate that defendant was in any way involved in burglary. Holmes v. State, 481 So. 2d 319 (Miss. 1985).

Testimony by defense witnesses to effect that defendant was sleeping at trailer at time of burglary with which defendant is charged, contradicting state witnesses placing defendant at scene of burglary, entitles defendant to have alibi instruction given. Holmes v. State, 481 So. 2d 319 (Miss. 1985).

An instruction to the jury properly setting forth the essentials of burglary as to the breaking and entering and the intent, but the personal property, the object of the intent was described as money of the value of $50 or more, cigarettes and a pistol was proper where the indictment did not allege or charge the value of the single article alleged to have been stolen or carried away because the indictment did allege the value of the money to be $80 and the proof showed that at least $50 of such money was actually stolen and carried away. Lewis v. State, 212 Miss. 775, 55 So. 2d 475 (1951).

Instruction that the burglary charged may be proven by circumstances, and it is not necessary to have eyewitness to deed if circumstances in evidence are sufficient to create in minds of jury belief that accused is guilty beyond reasonable doubt and to exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt of accused is correct charge to jury. Bone v. State, 207 Miss. 868, 43 So. 2d 571 (1949).

Instruction referring to defendant and another breaking into house held not objectionable as depriving defendant of severance granted in trial, since it was proper to show who did the breaking, as each was guilty if both broke into building, or if one did it with assistance of the other. Yates v. State, 172 Miss. 581, 161 So. 147 (1935).

17. Conviction.

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's burglary conviction as the evidence was sufficient to show that the victim's room in the rooming house where the burglary occurred constituted a dwelling for the purposes of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(1) (Rev. 2006). The room was the victim's residence as he paid rent and was the only individual with a key to the room, all of his belongings were in the room, he repeatedly referred to his room as his "home" in his testimony, and there was no evidence that the room was not his permanent residence or that he did not plan to remain there. Taylor v. State, 109 So. 3d 589 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Where the evidence showed that defendant approached a vehicle and looked inside before approaching a second vehicle, looking inside, breaking its window, and fleeing after the vehicle's alarm sounded, defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the defense of abandonment because it was extremely likely that defendant would have burglarized the second vehicle if its car alarm had not sounded. Because the burglary would have been completed if defendant had not been interrupted by the car alarm, the trial judge committed no error in refusing to allow the abandonment instruction, as it was not supported by the evidence. Hawkins v. State, 11 So. 3d 123 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of attempted burglary of an automobile where it showed that defendant approached a vehicle and looked inside before approaching a second vehicle, looking inside, breaking its window, and fleeing after the vehicle's alarm sounded. Hawkins v. State, 11 So. 3d 123 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's burglary conviction, where the prosecution presented evidence that (1) defendant's fingerprints were found on a coin dispenser located in a restricted portion of the bank; (2) a patrolman witnessed defendant emerging from a back door of the bank at approximately 1:38 a.m.; (3) defendant was dressed in a heavy jacket and long sleeve shirt in the middle of May; (4) the point of entry was a broken glass window; (5) defendant had broken glass particles in his clothing and on his person and (6) defendant had possession of a bag of coins taken from the bank. Williams v. State, 919 So. 2d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of a burglary of a high school, as two witnesses testified they heard defendant admit he had committed the burglary, and defendant's statement placed him inside the school. Hunter v. State, 878 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 878 So. 2d 1066, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 968 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

State proved that defendant entered auto repair shop with the intent to steal valuable items inside even though no item of value was on his person when he was arrested hanging from a window of the shop's building around midnight, as the fair and logical inference to be drawn from the evidence was that defendant intended to take the valuable items since he had no other reasonable explanation for the circumstances. Brown v. State, 799 So. 2d 870 (Miss. 2001).

Since conspiracy and burglary are separate and distinct crimes requiring proof of different elements, a defendant did not have a double jeopardy claim based on the prosecution of these 2 crimes arising from the same incident, despite the fact that the prosecution chose to prosecute the defendant for these crimes at separate trials. House v. State, 645 So. 2d 931 (Miss. 1994).

A jury would have been warranted in finding the defendant guilty as an accessory after the fact to burglary or larceny, but not as a principal to burglary, where the defendant was present at the time of the burglary of a store but neither assisted nor encouraged the perpetrator of the burglary by any word or act to commit the crime. Smith v. State, 523 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. 1988).

Where defendant helped plan the crime, watched and stood guard while other parties did the actual breaking and entering of gasoline station, defendant was properly convicted of burglary notwithstanding he did not engage in the actual breaking. Wilkerson v. State, 207 Miss. 556, 42 So. 2d 745 (1949).

Judgment reciting verdict finding accused guilty of burglary, and adjudging accused guilty of burglary and larceny, held good; word "larceny" being surplusage. Brownlee v. State, 165 Miss. 193, 147 So. 339 (1933).

Conviction under indictment for burglary with intent to commit larceny not disturbed in absence of evidence that burglarious entry had different object. Moseley v. State, 92 Miss. 250, 45 So. 833 (1908).

Under indictment having two counts conviction must be referred to sufficient count and not insufficient one. Moseley v. State, 92 Miss. 250, 45 So. 833 (1908).

Under indictment charging burglary and larceny, verdict of "guilty as charged" is one of guilty of burglary alone. Dees v. State, 89 Miss. 754, 42 So. 605 (1907).

18. Miscellaneous.

Where defendant was convicted of burglary of a building, although the prosecution violated Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 9.04 for failing to provide defendant with a copy of his false pretense conviction, the error did not require reversal. Although defendant argued that the State's use of his false pretense conviction to impeach him was devastating to his credibility, the instant case was not a circumstantial one and defendant was caught in the criminal act of which he was convicted. Powell v. State, 925 So. 2d 878

(Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 183 (Miss. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for auto burglary because defendant was found hiding in the victim's vehicle shortly after the crime with no reasonable explanation for being there, he was lying out of sight, he was breathing hard and sweating, and a police officer had seen two men running in the area. Qualls v. State, 947 So. 2d 365 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant's sentence for burglary was the maximum, but was within the statutory limits, there was no violation of U.S. Const. amend. VIII in terms of cruel and unusual punishment, and the fact the conviction was defendant's first felony conviction was inconsequential. Nichols v. State, 826 So. 2d 1288 (Miss. 2002).

Where the jury was properly instructed as to the elements of burglary and grand larceny and the prosecutor did not elicit testimony specific to the statutory elements of burglary, the jury's verdict to acquit on the burglary charge and convict on the grand larceny charge was supported by the evidence. Allen v. State, 755 So. 2d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

A burglary conviction is not ordinarily admissible under Rule 609(a)(2), Miss. R. Ev., as a crime involving dishonesty or false statement. Townsend v. State, 605 So. 2d 767 (Miss. 1992).

Records of criminal offenses are kept pursuant to § 45-27-1. The legislature of Mississippi has specifically authorized expungement of criminal offender records in limited cases-youth court cases, §§ 43-21-159 and 43-21-265; first offense misdemeanor convictions occurring prior to age 23, § 99-19-71; drug possession convictions occurring prior to age 26, § 41-29-150; purchase of alcoholic beverages by one under age 21, § 67-3-70; and municipal court convictions, § 21-23-7. Expungement of felony convictions which arose pursuant to guilty pleas are governed by § 99-15-57 which provides that any person who pled guilty within 6 months prior to the effective date of § 99-15-26 may apply to the court for an order expunging his or her criminal records.

Under §§ 99-15-57 and 99-15-26 a circuit court has the power to expunge a felony conviction pursuant to a guilty plea under certain conditions. Accordingly, a petitioner who pled guilty to the felony of burglary might have been eligible for relief pursuant to §§ 99-15-57 and 99-15-26 if his guilty plea had occurred on or after October 1, 1982, that being the earliest date to satisfy the "within 6 months prior to" March 31, 1983, requirement of § 99-15-57. However, the petitioner pleaded guilty to burglary on October 9, 1979, 3 years prior to October 1, 1982, and admitted that he did not fall within the criterion in any of the statutes authorizing expungement, and thus the trial court did not err in denying his petition for expungement. Caldwell v. State, 564 So. 2d 1371 (Miss. 1990).

Circuit Court was within its discretion in instructing jury that they should deliberate further after jury sent court note at 5:50 p.m. indicating that it was deadlocked; argument that court erred in failing to consider jurors' personal needs, i.e. that it was nearing supertime, was rejected. Wright v. State, 512 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 1987).

Sentence of 6 years was not excessive for conviction of burglary where defendant was 21 years old at time of sentence, married and had 2 children, had no prior criminal record, co-operated with authorities, and crime was not one of violence, because sentence was within maximum penalty provided by statute for that offense. Turbo Trucking Co. v. Rollins, 511 So. 2d 148 (Miss. 1987).

Petitioner was subject to 7-year sentence for burglary, where the documentation presented for sentencing in the trial court indicated that he had 2 prior convictions-for grand larceny and for business burglary-and had been sentenced to separate terms of one year or more in the state penal institution. Rideout v. State, 496 So. 2d 667 (Miss. 1986).

Where it appeared that when accused's burglary case was called he requested a continuance in order to obtain counsel, which was granted for one day, and a request for continuance made the following day for the same purpose was denied, whereupon accused was tried and convicted, accused was not deprived of due process of law guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution, it appearing that the accused had had ample notice of the charge made against him and ample opportunity to employ counsel to defend him if he so desired, he was a man of at least average intelligence, had cross-examined witnesses at his trial, and testimony on his behalf showed that he had a clear understanding of the case made against him. Poole v. State, 229 Miss. 176, 90 So. 2d 212 (1956), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 988, 77 S. Ct. 1286, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1144 (1957).

If a person is granted bail by a municipal court on a charge of aggravated assault and while out on bail a justice court finds probable cause that the person has committed commercial burglary, the justice court should revoke bail for the aggravated assault charge and shall order the person detained, without bail, on the commercial burglary charge, pending trial on the aggravated assault charge. Turnage, June 26, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0246.

§ 97-17-35. Burglary; possession of burglar's tools.

It is unlawful for any person to have in his possession implements, tools, or instruments designed to aid in the commission of burglary, larceny or robbery; and on the conviction of any person thereof, he shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five (5) years, or in the county jail not exceeding one year. The carrying concealed about one's person, or in one's baggage, implements, tools, or instruments peculiarly adapted to aid in the commission of burglary, larceny or robbery, shall be prima facie evidence of intention to use them for such purpose.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. What are burglar's tools.
3. Possession.
4. Evidence.
5. Sentence.

1. In general.

The elements of the offense of possession of burglary tools are as follows: (1) adaptation and design of the tool or implement for breaking and entering; (2) possession of such tools by one with knowledge of their character, and (3) a general intent to use or employ them in breaking and entering. Pamphlet v. State, 271 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1972).

Although it is not necessary to show a specific intent to use the tools in a burglary, there must be evidence either that the tools have probably been recently used for the purpose of unlawfully breaking and entering or that they are about to be used for such purpose. Pamphlet v. State, 271 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1972).

It is not an essential element of the crime of possession of burglary tools that any particular tool be specifically designed for the purpose of being used in a burglary, but there must be evidence from which the jury can find the intent to use them in breaking and entering. Pamphlet v. State, 271 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1972).

The elements of the offense of possessing burglar's tools are adaptation for breaking and entering, possession with knowledge of their character, and a general intent to use them in breaking and entering. Johnson v. State, 246 Miss. 182, 145 So. 2d 156 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 702, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963).

To warrant a conviction of the possessor of articles susceptible of lawful use, it is sufficient to prove a general felonious intent, without showing an intent to commit a particular crime. Fuqua v. State, 246 Miss. 191, 145 So. 2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 709, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963), reh'g denied, 373 U.S. 947, 83 S. Ct. 1536, 10 L. Ed. 2d 703 (1963).

2. What are burglar's tools.

Key question in determining whether a particular tool qualifies as a burglary tool is whether the evidence reveals circumstances from which it may be inferred beyond a reasonable doubt that the possessor intended that he or some other person use the article or articles in aid of burglary or other similar crime. Peters v. State, 920 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Even tools designed for a lawful purpose can be considered burglar's tools. Peters v. State, 920 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where a bolt cutter, a long crowbar, several hammers and other crowbars together with a burglar alarm jumper were found in the automobile of the defendant, he was properly convicted of possession of burglar's tools. McCollum v. State, 197 So. 2d 252 (Miss. 1967).

It is not necessary that a tool or article be designed and made solely as a burglar's tool to warrant a conviction under this section [Code 1942, § 2044], if they are possessed for the purpose of committing burglary. Fuqua v. State, 246 Miss. 191, 145 So. 2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 709, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963), reh'g denied, 373 U.S. 947, 83 S. Ct. 1536, 10 L. Ed. 2d 703 (1963).

The possession of particular articles may or may not be unlawful under the statute, depending on whether the evidence reveals circumstances from which unlawful use is intended. Fuqua v. State, 246 Miss. 191, 145 So. 2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 709, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963), reh'g denied, 373 U.S. 947, 83 S. Ct. 1536, 10 L. Ed. 2d 703 (1963).

3. Possession.

The possession of burglar's tools may be actual or constructive, joint or individual. Two persons may have constructive possession, or one may have actual possession and the other constructive possession. Johnson v. State, 246 Miss. 182, 145 So. 2d 156 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 702, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963).

Constructive possession of burglar's tools may be shown by evidence of the surrounding circumstances. Johnson v. State, 246 Miss. 182, 145 So. 2d 156 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372

One riding as a passenger in an automobile may be found to be in constructive possession of burglar's tools therein, where there are indications that her presence was not temporary and her handbag contained a police badge and two loaded pistols. Johnson v. State, 246 Miss. 182, 145 So. 2d 156 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 702, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963).

Where the record showed that the owner had complete control and possession of the automobile, and the burglary tools, articles and instruments found therein belonged to him, mere fact that the accused was a passenger in the automobile while the tools were in the trunk thereof was insufficient to sustain his conviction for possession of burglary tools. Newton v. State, 232 Miss. 114, 98 So. 2d 116 (1957).

4. Evidence.

Evidence was more than sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for possession of burglary tools where the evidence showed beyond a reasonable doubt that he possessed a crowbar knowing of its character, and that he intended to use, or had in fact used, the crowbar to burglarize county property. Peters v. State, 920 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant attempted to remove tires from a vehicle in a car lot at two o'clock in the morning, and police found a screwdriver and a small flashlight in his possession and a four-way lug wrench was on the ground, the evidence supported his conviction for possession of larceny tools. The State was not required to present direct testimony that defendant lacked consent to remove the tires, because possession of larceny tools did not require proof of a "taking", permissive or otherwise. Brownlee v. State, 912 So. 2d 1000 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Burglar's tools observed by a police officer who saw them through the window of an automobile which he had stopped after receiving information which constituted probable cause that its occupants had recently engaged in a felony were properly introduced in evidence at the trial of the driver of the automobile. McCollum v. State, 197 So. 2d 252 (Miss. 1967).

In view of testimony that tools of this type were commonly found in the possession of burglars, the jury could find defendants guilty of possession of burglary tools where a sledge hammer, to which a cold chisel had been welded, and another tool, which could be used as a crowbar or wedge, was found in the car which the defendants were driving, and the earpiece of a walkie-talkie was found in the pocket of one of the defendants. Corn v. State, 250 Miss. 157, 164 So. 2d 777 (1964).

A conviction for possessing burglar's tools is warranted by proof of possession of 150 skeleton keys of various kinds, socket wrenches, loaded pistols, extra ammunition, policeman's badge, a keyhole flash-light, kid gloves, spot lights, and a stolen pistol. Fuqua v. State, 246 Miss. 191, 145 So. 2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 372 U.S. 709, 83 S. Ct. 1018, 10 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1963), reh'g denied, 373 U.S. 947, 83 S. Ct. 1536, 10 L. Ed. 2d 703 (1963).

5. Sentence.

Where defendant was convicted for possession of larceny tools, the circuit court properly sentenced him to five years with all five suspended. His sentence was clearly within statutory limits and not disproportionate to the crime. Brownlee v. State, 912 So. 2d 1000 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

1. In general.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for grand larceny, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41(1), because the jury could certainly infer from photographs and the owner's testimony that the van taken by defendant was worth at least $ 500. Kirkwood v. State, 53 So. 3d 7 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed in part by, reversed by, remanded in part by 52 So. 3d 1184, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 36 (Miss. 2011).

One who sells property of another in his possession, believing it to be his own, is not guilty of larceny. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

Where the defendant borrowed a shotgun with the promise to return it the next morning, but did not return it and informed the prosecuting witness that the gun was lost and the defendant promised to buy a new one but never did so, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction of larceny. Smith v. State, 214 Miss. 453, 59 So. 2d 74 (1952).

In the absence of statutory modifications, it is essential to every larceny that there be a felonious or fraudulent taking, accompanied by the carrying away or asportation by one person of the personal goods of property of another which may be the subject of larceny and such taking must be without the consent and against the will of the owner involving a trespass to latter's possession or its equivalent, and with the felonious intent on the part of the taking existing at the time of the taking, to steal the same. Smith v. State, 214 Miss. 453, 59 So. 2d 74 (1952); Simmons v. State, 208 Miss. 523, 44 So. 2d 857 (1950).

Where hotel maid while cleaning guest's room found guest's wallet containing money under pillow and took it with her to her sister's home when she went off duty, jury was warranted in finding that the trespass, which is an essential element of the crime of larceny, was committed when the defendant concluded to take the property of the guest away from the hotel in disobedience of her instructions to report it either to the manager or the housekeeper. Harris v. State, 207 Miss. 241, 42 So. 2d 183 (1949).

There is no offense where owner consents to conversion. Foster v. State, 123 Miss. 721, 86 So. 513 (1920).

Selling property which the seller knows not to belong to him and appropriating the proceeds to his own use is not necessarily larceny, a felonious taking is necessary. Watkins v. State, 60 Miss. 323 (1882).

2. Larceny.

Where an employee alleged that the employee was terminated in retaliation for reporting larceny and federal income tax evasion regarding tip pool distribution at a casino, the McArn exception to the employment-at-will doctrine did not apply, because the employee did not demonstrate that the activities the employee complained of warranted the imposition of criminal penalties, as opposed to mere civil penalties. Kyle v. Circus Circus Miss., Inc., — F. Supp. 2d —, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59050 (N.D. Miss. June 15, 2010), affirmed by 430 Fed. Appx. 247, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 8834, 32 I.E.R. Cas. (BNA) 285 (5th Cir. Miss. 2011).

Under state's evidence showing that the defendant was present, aiding, abetting and participating in the theft of a combine, he should have been charged with grand larceny, and his conviction of receiving stolen property was improper, requiring reversal. Hentz v. State, 489 So. 2d 1386 (Miss. 1986).

When a person, even an agent of the owner, takes possession of property with the unlawful intent to feloniously convert the property to his own use at the time he acquires possession, he is guilty of larceny and not embezzlement. Mahfouz v. State, 303 So. 2d 461 (Miss. 1974).

In a prosecution for the theft of certain cattle, defendant's co-indictee, the cattle manager and employee of the partnership owning the cattle who could only make sales for partnership upon authorization of one of the partners, was a mere caretaker with custody of the property, and the offense charged was grand larceny as contrasted with embezzlement. Mills v. State, 231 Miss. 641, 97 So. 2d 386 (1957).

Where the possession of personal property is fraudulently obtained, there being no intention on the part of the owner that ownership or legal title should thereby pass, and the person who obtained possession intends to deprive the owner of the property, and in pursuance of such intent does deprive the owner thereof, the offense is larceny. Conn v. State, 228 Miss. 833, 89 So. 2d 840 (1956).

A servant or employee who feloniously appropriates to his own use property of his master or employer to which he has access only by reason of mere physical propinquity as an incident of his employment, and not be reason of any charge or oversight over the property entrusted to him, commits the offense of larceny. Jackson v. State, 211 Miss. 828, 52 So. 2d 914 (1951).

Larceny is the taking and carrying away from any place, at any time, of the personal property of another without his consent, by a person not entitled to possession thereof, feloniously with the intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently and to convert it to the use of the taker or of some person other than the owner. Jackson v. State, 211 Miss. 828, 52 So. 2d 914 (1951); Crouse v. State, 229 Miss. 15, 89 So. 2d 919 (1956).

Obtaining and keeping of money under practice known as "pigeon-dropping", victim delivering money of his own to pretended finder of large sum to establish right to participate in division of money found, constitutes crime of grand larceny instead of obtaining money under false pretenses. Garvin v. State, 207 Miss. 751, 43 So. 2d 209 (1949).

The crime of grand larceny was complete where defendant and others induced the complaining witness to part with $1,500 for the purpose of changing it into bills of larger denominations by a chemical process, upon the promise to return the identical money used together with a sum of money as a profit for its use, and upon receiving such money defendant disappeared with it, as against the contention that the complaining witness's money was taken in his presence and with his consent and therefore there was no larceny. Ware v. State, 186 Miss. 533, 191 So. 678 (1939).

One who unlawfully takes another's personal property not intending to steal, but who afterward converts it to his own use intending to steal, is guilty of larceny. If the original taking were lawful the rule is different. Beatty v. State, 61 Miss. 18 (1883).

But if a person by fraudulent means obtains possession of goods even with the owner's consent with the felonious intent to deprive the owner of them and do in fact deprive him of his property, it is larceny. Watson v. State, 36 Miss. 593 (1859).

3. Obtaining by false pretenses.

If possession of property is obtained by fraud and the owner intends to part with his title as well as his possession, the crime is that of obtaining property by false pretenses, provided the means by which it is acquired comply therewith, but the possession of property if fraudulently obtained with present intent on the part of the person obtaining it to convert the property to his own use, and the owner intends to part with possession merely and not with the title, the offense is larceny. Wilkinson v. State, 215 Miss. 327, 60 So. 2d 786 (1952).

When personal property is fraudulently obtained under such circumstances that owner intends that no title shall pass, offense is grand larceny, but when he intends that ownership or legal title shall pass the offense is that of obtaining money under false pretenses. Garvin v. State, 207 Miss. 751, 43 So. 2d 209 (1949).

4. Embezzlement.

State failed to prove the elements of embezzlement in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 beyond a reasonable doubt and thus the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict; in order to prove embezzlement, the State had to provide evidence of the following: (1) a company owned the car in question, (2) the car was lawfully entrusted to defendant, and (3) defendant wrongfully converted the vehicle to his own use, and while the State established car ownership by the company given the vehicle identification number, the State did not prove that defendant was entrusted with the vehicle, given that (1) defendant did not have permission to take company vehicle off the lot just by being an employee of the company, (2) the car belonged to a different location where defendant was never employed, and (3) defendant did not possess a valid driver's license, which prohibited him from lawfully driving company vehicles as part of his job. At best, the evidence might have shown the actual theft of property, but it did not prove embezzlement, and the court reversed and rendered. Lockett v. State, 989 So. 2d 995 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Embezzlement is the wrongful appropriation or conversion of property where the original taking was lawful, or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the taking involves a trespass, and a felonious intent must exist at the time of such taking. Jackson v. State, 211 Miss. 828, 52 So. 2d 914 (1951).

5. Possession of stolen property distinguished from larceny.

One who receives stolen car from thief, knowing it was stolen, and after assuring thief that if he would steal and bring him a good car defendant would receive and pay for it, is not guilty of larceny but of receiving stolen goods. Harper v. State, 207 Miss. 733, 43 So. 2d 183 (1949).

6. Intent.

Defendant's taking of a tiller from the hardware store without paying for it and his delivering the tiller to his father for one-hundred dollars was proof that defendant had the intent to permanently deprive the owner of the property. Berry v. State, 754 So. 2d 539 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for grand larceny arising from the erroneous issuance of a $13,860 check to the defendant, the defendant's wrongful possession occurred when the corporation that issued the check realized the error and made demand for the property, and the requisite intent to wrongfully keep the property developed at that time since the defendant did not thereafter return it. State v. Smith, 652 So. 2d 1126 (Miss. 1995).

The specific intent to deprive the owner of his property wholly and permanently is a necessary ingredient of larceny; the taking of property with the intention of using it temporarily and with no intention of depriving its owner permanently is not larceny. Slay v. State, 241 So. 2d 362 (Miss. 1970).

Where the defendant admitted the wrongful taking of an automobile from a motor company lot, but claimed that he intended only to drive it around that night and then return it, and it was shown that he drove it only within the city limits even after he was given a ticket for driving without a license and tag, such evidence precluded a conviction of grand larceny, but rather indicated an act of trespass less than larceny, since it did not appear that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently. Slay v. State, 241 So. 2d 362 (Miss. 1970).

Felonious intent is not negated by abandonment of property when the owner appeared and made no attempt to repossess it after he left. Mapp v. State, 248 Miss. 898, 162 So. 2d 642 (1964).

Larcenous taking must be animo furandi, that is, there must be intent permanently to deprive owner of his property. Hubbard v. State, 41 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1949).

7. Asportation.

Removal from one part of the owner's premises to another is a sufficient asportation. Mapp v. State, 248 Miss. 898, 162 So. 2d 642 (1964).

An asportation or carrying away of the property is an essential element of the crime. A bare removal from the place where the goods are found is sufficient. Alexander v. State, 60 Miss. 953 (1883); Williams v. State, 63 Miss. 58 (1885).

8. Subjects of larceny.

Failure of owner's son-in-law and employee to return automobile with which he had been entrusted, constitutes embezzlement but not larceny. Peerless Ins. Co. v. St. Laurent, 247 Miss. 134, 154 So. 2d 135 (1963).

Where two butane gas heaters were placed in the auditorium of the church and they were bolted or screwed on to the pipes which had been run under and through the floor and which carried gas, the gas heaters were not fixtures and defendant was properly indicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2240] instead of Code 1942, § 2246, which deals with larceny of fixtures. Garrett v. State, 213 Miss. 328, 56 So. 2d 809 (1952).

Contraband liquor may be the subject of larceny. Passons v. State, 208 Miss. 545, 45 So. 2d 131 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

A deed to land is the subject of larceny under Code 1892, §§ 1173, 1174, 1513. State v. Hughes, 80 Miss. 609, 31 So. 963 (1902).

9. Lost property.

One who fraudulently claims an estray from the person taking it up for lost property from the finder may be convicted of larceny. Wilkinson v. State, 215 Miss. 327, 60 So. 2d 786 (1952).

Where an accused urges employer to falsely represent to possessor of stray cattle that such cattle belong to the employer and to thereby obtain possession and sell such cattle and share the proceeds of the sale, he was properly prosecuted under the grand larceny statute. Wilkinson v. State, 215 Miss. 327, 60 So. 2d 786 (1952).

One who falsely impersonates another and in such assumed character receives property intended for such other person, is guilty of larceny if he does so with the requisite felonious intent, provided the transaction does not involve the passing of title to the property from the owner to him. Wilkinson v. State, 215 Miss. 327, 60 So. 2d 786 (1952).

A pressing shop employee who, finding a diamond bar pin lying loose in the bottom of a clothes basket, laid it aside in some place other than the desk in the office, and, the owner not having claimed it in two or three weeks, disposed of it to a pawnbroker, was not guilty of "larceny," it appearing that he had not relinquished the custody and control of the pin while it remained in the pressing shop, and it not being shown that he knew who was the owner of the pin or that he had any immediate means of ascertaining who the owner was with any reasonable degree of certainty. Calhoun v. State, 191 Miss. 82, 2 So. 2d 802 (1941).

10. Assisting thief.

One who steals property, or who is accessory before fact to grand larceny cannot be convicted of receiving, concealing, or aiding in concealing, the property stolen. Thomas v. State, 205 Miss. 653, 39 So. 2d 272 (1949).

One who drives his car to seed house door after midnight, assists in loading fertilizer in car after two other persons have unlocked door, entered seed house and brought fertilizer to door, and is actually present, aiding, abetting, and participating in theft of fertilizer, is a principal guilty of larceny and not of receiving stolen property. Thomas v. State, 205 Miss. 653, 39 So. 2d 272 (1949).

One aiding and assisting thief in making away with property after knowledge that it is stolen guilty of "larceny." Devine v. State, 132 Miss. 492, 96 So. 696 (1923).

11. Successive larcenies.

Defendant was not subjected to double jeopardy as while the two grand larceny offenses were committed closely in time and against the same victim, the record reflected that the offenses had occurred at different times, in different locations, and arose from separate acts. Hughery v. State, 915 So. 2d 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 779 (Miss. 2005).

Two entries into church, taking 2 heaters from church each time, which are for primary purpose of stealing 4 heaters, are single continuous transaction for purposes of grand larceny prosecution. Ellis v. State, 469 So. 2d 1256 (Miss. 1985).

Evidence that the accused, charged with stealing 10 sacks of dairy feed at a total value of $35, took the feed, one sack at a time, from the owner's barn by wheelbarrow, and the transportation in this manner was a continuous, consecutive operation, was sufficient to sustain a grand larceny conviction as against the accused's contention that he could not be guilty of that crime since the proof showed, at most, that he took and carried away only one sack of feed at a time, worth only $3.50. Barnes v. State, 230 Miss. 299, 92 So. 2d 863 (1957).

Several petty larcenies cannot be consolidated so as to constitute grand larceny, but where the several takings are one continuous transaction it constitutes grand larceny. Dodson v. State, 130 Miss. 137, 93 So. 579 (1922).

Where this is one continual transaction, the thief may be convicted of the final carrying away although there may have been several distinct asportations, but where there are successive larcenies each complete and distinct and not constituting one continuing transaction, the mere retention and possession by the thief of the fruits of his petit larcenies do not make him guilty of grand larceny. Scarver v. State, 53 Miss. 407 (1876).

There is no presumption that various articles found in defendant's possession were all stolen at one time. Scarver v. State, 53 Miss. 407 (1876).

12. Indictment.

Where the inmate asserted that the sentence on the charge of grand larceny under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41 was illegal because no indictment on that charge was ever returned before the inmate pled guilty to it, the claim failed, as the inmate waived the right to an indictment in writing and in open court. Battaya v. State, 861 So. 2d 364 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

An indictment charging grand larceny for the removal of flowers from a grave was not fatally flawed even if it incorrectly named the owner of the flowers where the indictment specified the date of the theft, the property taken, and the location from which it was taken, and was therefore sufficient to put the defendants on notice of the crime charged and to prevent subsequent prosecution for the same incident. Cooper v. State, 639 So. 2d 1320 (Miss. 1994).

A defendant convicted of a single charge of grand larceny could not successfully complain because he had been charged in a multi-count indictment which in addition to the grand larceny charge also charged him with conspiracy to commit grand larceny, and a further charge that he was a recidivist in that he had previously been convicted of four separate felonies. Perkins v. State, 487 So. 2d 791 (Miss. 1986).

An indictment charging the theft of 34 bundles of roofing of the total value of $103.70 is not vague or indefinite. Murray v. State, 266 So. 2d 139 (Miss. 1972), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 907, 93 S. Ct. 1534, 36 L. Ed. 2d 196 (1973), reh'g denied, 411 U.S. 959, 93 S. Ct. 1929, 36 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1973).

An indictment incorrectly charging that the grand larceny was committed on November 14, 1968, while the evidence showed that it was actually committed on August 16, was not insufficient where the defendant was not surprised or prejudiced by testimony that the offense occurred on August 16, and in fact offered testimony of alibi for both dates. Deaton v. State, 242 So. 2d 452 (Miss. 1970).

An indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2240] must allege the value of the property charged to have been stolen. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

Where accused had allegedly stolen property in another state and transported it into Mississippi, the indictment must aver the larceny took place in the county where accused is found possessing it, if he is to be tried there. Coggins v. State, 234 Miss. 369, 106 So. 2d 388 (1958).

An indictment charging that the accused stole 10 sacks of dairy seed of the value of $3.50 each, the total value of $35, the personal property of another, was sufficient, without specifying the different types of grain, or other elements, and a percentage of each, composing the dairy feed. Barnes v. State, 230 Miss. 299, 92 So. 2d 863 (1957).

An indictment for grand larceny containing an incongruous description of the cow allegedly stolen if defective should have been availed of by demurrer and such defect could not be raised for first time on appeal. Clark v. State, 39 So. 2d 783 (Miss. 1949), error overruled, 206 Miss. 701, 40 So. 2d 591 (1949).

An indictment for larceny should describe the property alleged to have been taken with reasonable certainty, so that the description will enable the court to determine that the property in question is the subject of larceny, show the jury that such property is that upon which the indictment is founded, reasonably inform the accused of the instance meant in conformity with the constitutional guaranty in that respect so that he may properly prepare his defense, and be such that the judgment rendered after trial upon the indictment may be pleaded in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. Rutherford v. State, 196 Miss. 321, 17 So. 2d 803 (1944).

While Code 1942, § 2459 provides the exception as to descriptions of property in indictments for larceny by allowing the same to be described in general terms where the charge is for larceny of money or evidences of debt, the chapter on criminal procedure does not otherwise abrogate the common-law rule requiring the description of personal property in an indictment for larceny to be reasonably definite and certain. Rutherford v. State, 196 Miss. 321, 17 So. 2d 803 (1944).

Indictment in grand larceny prosecution charging defendant with theft of "a quantity of clover seed," of the value of "more than $25 in lawful money," was so vague, uncertain and indefinite as to give defendant no intimation regarding amount of clover seed which he was accused of stealing and was subject to demurrer. Rutherford v. State, 196 Miss. 321, 17 So. 2d 803 (1944).

An indictment charging the defendants with the theft of three suits of clothes, but separately stating each suit and its respective value of $15 without charging the total amount, was not objectionable as failing to charge a felony, since necessarily the taking and stealing of separate suits of the separate value of $15 each aggregated $45 and constituted grand larceny. Harvey v. State, 188 Miss. 428, 194 So. 925 (1940).

If the indictment charge that the accused stole "a mule," it will not be bad because it does not aver that the mule was "personal" property. Jones v. State, 51 Miss. 718, 24 Am. R. 658 (1875).

Where chattels are stolen in one county and carried into another, the indictment in the latter should charge the larceny to have been committed there. Johnson v. State, 47 Miss. 671 (1873).

13. —Variance between indictment and proof.

Case remanded for sentencing on grand larceny where the State failed to prove every element of the indictment for robbery, but did prove all the elements of the lesser-included offense of grand larceny. Clayton v. State, 759 So. 2d 1169 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for grand larceny, where the testimony showed that a common carrier had the property involved in its possession for transportation from consignors to consignees who were the owners of the property, the freight line was a common carrier bailee in rightful possession of the property and there was no fatal variance between the proof and the indictment charging that the articles of personal property alleged to have been stolen were the property of the common carrier. Mahfouz v. State, 303 So. 2d 461 (Miss. 1974).

Variance between allegation of indictment that animal allegedly stolen was "white," whereas proof showed it was white with small yellow and brown spots was held not a material variation especially in view of testimony that the yearling was of a breed known as "white cattle." Clark v. State, 39 So. 2d 783 (Miss. 1949), error overruled, 206 Miss. 701, 40 So. 2d 591 (1949).

14. Evidence.

In a case where defendant was convicted of several crimes relating to the arson and burglary of a residence, his double jeopardy rights were not violated due to the fact that some of the elements of the crimes overlapped; each of the crimes involved required proof of an additional fact that the other did not. McCullins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Evidence was competent to sustain a grand larceny conviction where the State proved that the value of the stolen desk was more than $250 where the item was purchased for substantially more than $250; since the property in question tended not to decline in value, the fact that the victim's husband paid more than $250 was credible evidence that would support a grand larceny conviction. Thompson v. State, 910 So. 2d 60 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

From testimony presented, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to resolve any conflicts in favor of the State and find defendant guilty of grand larceny; the owner of the stolen carburetor testified that it was worth at least $1000 and that he had to buy a used carburetor for $400 to replace the stolen one. Nelson v. State, 839 So. 2d 584 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

An unlawful taking may be established by circumstantial evidence, such as subsequent conduct. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

Whether defendant's explanation of how he came into possession of property charged to have been stolen sufficiently disproves an intent to steal, is for the jury, save where the evidence fails to establish such intent beyond a reasonable doubt. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

In a grand larceny prosecution, admission of testimony of a witness, who had been indicted for receiving property involved in the theft, which was not contradicted, was not improbable, and was reasonable, was not error, even though the witness testified that he had an agreement with the state that if he told the truth the charges against him would be dropped. Hoke v. State, 232 Miss. 329, 98 So. 2d 886 (1957).

Where the sheriff, in testifying, had attributed to the accused statements which were admissions of fact pertinent to the issue which, in connection with other facts, tended to prove accused's guilt, the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to permit the accused to either show by the sheriff that the accused had denied the crime or to show the entire statement, upon the ground that any explanation of the statement made by the accused to the sheriff would be self-serving. Davis v. State, 230 Miss. 183, 92 So. 2d 359 (1957).

Although consisting of a mixed statement of fact and opinion, the admission of testimony of an expert, who made plaster casts of the tire tracks of the truck used in the larceny, as to distinguishing marks in the tracks and tire cast was not reversible error. Crouse v. State, 229 Miss. 15, 89 So. 2d 919 (1956).

In prosecution for the crime of "pigeon dropping" which under this section [Code 1942, § 2240] is larceny, the trial court was not in error in permitting the state to reopen the case in order to more clearly prove the victim's ownership of the money which has been taken from her, where the defendant was offered opportunity to present any further testimony she might desire. Lewis v. State, 56 So. 2d 397 (Miss. 1952).

In prosecution for grand larceny, when every essential element except intent is shown by evidence, intent may be inferred from circumstances surrounding taking, i.e., that it occurred under cover of darkness and that after the asportation the property was concealed. Simmons v. State, 208 Miss. 523, 44 So. 2d 857 (1950).

Where corpus delicti, in prosecution for larceny, is shown by preponderance of evidence, confession of defendant is admissible in evidence, and if confession coupled with proof of corpus delicti aliunde shows corpus delicti beyond reasonable doubt it is sufficient. Simmons v. State, 208 Miss. 523, 44 So. 2d 857 (1950).

Testimony of the manager of a stock yard as to the price paid for a yearling was admissible where the price coincided with the price admittedly received for a stolen yearling. Davis v. State, 200 Miss. 514, 27 So. 2d 769 (1946).

An agreement for the entry of a plea of guilty at a former term, which the evidence showed was induced by a promise of leniency, was incompetent as evidence against one accused of grand larceny. Elliott v. State, 185 Miss. 381, 189 So. 796 (1939).

On trial of trustee for larceny in taking portion of mortgaged goods he may testify as to what authority he had for his alleged unlawful act. Guthrie v. State, 47 So. 639 (Miss. 1908).

Where defendant denied having stolen money and it was found on him, he will not be permitted to testify in explanation as to what he told others or they told him.

Lohrey v. State, 91 Miss. 853, 45 So. 145 (1907).

15. —Sufficiency.

Defendant's conviction for grand larceny was appropriate because an eyewitness testified that he had seen defendant remove the bag of tools from the victim's trunk and carry them away; another eyewitness picked defendant out of a photo line up with no hesitation; two officers testified that defendant was carrying the black and gold bag of tools when approached on the street; and the evidence was sufficient for a reasonable juror to have found that the value of the stolen tools was more than $500. Gunn v. State, 56 So. 3d 568 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for grand larceny in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41(1)(a) was appropriate because one of the victims testified that one seven-piece socket set cost $150. Based on the victim's testimony regarding the rest of the stolen items, a jury could have reasonably inferred that the rest of the tools had a fair market value greater than $100, for a total over $250. Williams v. State, 994 So. 2d 821 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 642 (Miss. 2008).

Evidence was sufficient to support a grand larceny conviction where defendant was found in possession of the truck only six days after it was stolen without a credible explanation as to why he had possession, and he was seen several hundred yards away from the business where the truck was kept the night before it was taken. Presley v. State, 994 So. 2d 191 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2008).

In a grand larceny case, the evidence was legally sufficient to support a conviction based on the testimony of the witnesses that defendant was the person that stole property and ran from police; moreover, defendant was near the abandoned stolen property with fresh mud on his shoes and no credentials to be where he was. Easterling v. State, 963 So. 2d 49 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for grand larceny in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41 was reversed; the fact that defendant had asked the victim for money and then later had over $600 to buy a key-board was insufficient to prove that defendant stole the victim's money from his car, especially where the victim had left the money in his car for several hours with the car doors unlocked and the car windows rolled down. Hobbs v. State, 949 So. 2d 758 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Victim's father testified that he had paid between $3,000 and $4,000 for the truck rims; although this was not direct testimony as to the value of the rims, it circumstantially provided a basis for the jury to infer that the rims were worth at least $250; defendant's conviction for attempt to commit grand larceny was therefore appropriate and the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or in the alternative, a new trial. Smith v. State, 881 So. 2d 908 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

State's theory of the case was that defendant and the driver of the car that pulled into the victim's driveway had engaged in a prior conspiracy to steal the victim's truck rims, but there was no evidence of a "union of the minds" of defendant and the driver because the evidence showed that (1) when the car pulled into the driveway, defendant ran and hid behind the house and, clearly, if the two parties had been acting in concert, defendant would have recognized his co-conspirator and not hid; (2) defendant left on foot and not in the car, even though the car was still in the driveway; and (3) although the rims were removed from the truck, defendant made no attempt to put them into the car that was in the driveway; thus, although the appearance of the car in the victim's driveway was somewhat puzzling, a finding that its appearance was due to the furtherance of a conspiracy to steal the rims off of the truck would be an impermissible stretch. Therefore, the evidence was insufficient to support defendant's conviction for conspiracy to commit grand larceny. Smith v. State, 881 So. 2d 908 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant where defendant's explanation for having the stolen tank was neither reasonable nor credible, especially given that his passenger, whom he claimed was helping, was highly intoxicated at the time of the stop. Ray v. State, 864 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Circumstantial evidence that defendant was one of only three people who knew that his mother kept a locked safe in her home and the combination to the safe, that someone used the combination to open the safe and steal cash and other items, that defendant had been in the house while his mother was on an overnight trip, and that defendant had gambled at a riverboat casino on the night of the theft despite not having worked in approximately one month, excluded every reasonable hypothesis except that defendant had committed the theft; evidence was therefore sufficient to support conviction. Cates v. State, 823 So. 2d 1229 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where the jury was properly instructed as to the elements of burglary and grand larceny and the prosecutor did not elicit testimony specific to the statutory elements of burglary, the jury's verdict to acquit on the burglary charge and convict on the grand larceny charge was supported by the evidence. Allen v. State, 755 So. 2d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence was sufficient to establish that the value of the property taken by the defendant was at least $250 and, therefore, to sustain his conviction for grand larceny where the least value of the amount of money contained in the victim's purse found in the record was $342, the amount which a deputy sheriff testified that the victim told him when he went to her home in response to her telephone call to the police and where the court's analysis of the victim's testimony indicated that her estimate that $400 in cash was in her billfold before she paid for the propane gas was consistent with her description of the bills she paid before she returned home with the defendant. Millender v. State, 734 So. 2d 225 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Testimony of deputy sheriff and member of church that heaters stolen from church were worth about $150-$200 each, which evidence is contradicted by defense testimony that heaters were worth only $35-$40 each, is sufficient for jury to find that value of items allegedly stolen was in excess of $100. Ellis v. State, 469 So. 2d 1256 (Miss. 1985).

In a prosecution for larceny arising out of a "pigeon dropping" scheme, the evidence was sufficient to uphold the verdict where the victim positively identified the defendant and where the defendant's alibi witnesses had not actually seen the defendant during the morning of the crime but had only allegedly spoken to her over the telephone. Baker v. State, 396 So. 2d 1021 (Miss. 1981).

Testimony of the owner of 200 stolen quail and of an accomplice of the defendant was sufficient to establish the value of the quail at $1 each, or a total value in excess of the necessary $100 to constitute grand larceny. Deaton v. State, 242 So. 2d 452 (Miss. 1970).

Evidence held to support conviction of larceny of hog by person not able to give satisfactory account of its possession. Wilson v. State, 237 Miss. 294, 114 So. 2d 677 (1959).

In a prosecution for larceny of property in another state and brought into Mississippi, conviction was supported by evidence that accused was in the apartment where the property was located at time the owner left for work, and when the owner returned neither accused nor property was there, possession of the property by accused two days later hundreds of miles away, together with accused's explanation of the admitted taking of the property, which explanation was neither reasonable nor credible. Coggins v. State, 234 Miss. 369, 106 So. 2d 388 (1958).

A conviction for grand larceny resting largely upon the testimony of an alleged accomplice, which was without substantial corroboration, was against the overwhelming weight of the evidence where the defendant's evidence included the court records of a justice of the peace court showing that the defendant, at about the time the crime was committed, had been arrested for speeding and reckless driving at a place approximately 140 miles from the scene. Boyce v. State, 231 Miss. 847, 97 So. 2d 222 (1957).

Where testimony by the sheriff and the owner of the stolen property about the finding of the stolen property upon defendant's premises was incompetent because the search was made without warrant, evidence as to the tracks left at the scene of the theft and their comparison with the tracks made by defendant's truck was insufficient to sustain conviction, especially in view of testimony by defendant and his wife that defendant's son had borrowed the truck on the night of the theft, and that defendant had nothing to do with or knowledge of, the theft. Holder v. State, 230 Miss. 792, 93 So. 2d 841 (1957).

Testimony of dairy feed owner, who was experienced with dairy feed and its component parts, that he was owner of the ingredients that went into the finished product, detailing the nature, percentages and values of the different ingredients, and that the value of the 10 sacks of feed, which the accused was charged with stealing, was $35 was sufficient to show that the value of the stolen property was worth as much as $25. Barnes v. State, 230 Miss. 299, 92 So. 2d 863 (1957).

Circumstantial evidence which gave rise to a number of reasonable hypotheses as to what might have become of the prosecuting witness's billfold, other than the accused taking it, was not sufficient to sustain the accused's conviction of grand larceny. Williamson v. State, 229 Miss. 305, 90 So. 2d 657 (1956).

In prosecution for grand larceny where evidence showed that the accused received money for the purpose of changing it into bills of larger denomination by a chemical process, after which he was to return the identical money used together with a sum of money as a profit for its use and accused did not return the money, there was guilt of grand larceny effected by fraud. Jones v. State, 223 Miss. 812, 79 So. 2d 273 (1955), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 350 U.S. 869, 76 S. Ct. 116, 100 L. Ed. 770 (1955), reh'g denied, 350 U.S. 919, 76 S. Ct. 192, 100 L. Ed. 805 (1955).

In a prosecution for larceny the state must prove ownership of stolen property as alleged in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt. Bester v. State, 222 Miss. 706, 77 So. 2d 270 (1955).

In grand larceny prosecution where the owner testifies that he had not given anyone permission to take property that was sufficient proof of lack of consent by owner to take the property. Brady v. State, 48 So. 2d 865 (Miss. 1950).

In grand larceny prosecution for stealing purse containing several $20 bills, undisputed evidence that defendant was in possession of a $20 bill positively identified as having been among the bills stolen, was sufficient to make out case for jury. Haney v. State, 199 Miss. 568, 24 So. 2d 778 (1946).

Defendant did not, beyond a reasonable doubt, have felonious intent to steal so as to justify conviction of grand larceny, where, upon being directed by his mother to sell a cow to pay debts, defendant openly and in the daytime took the cow from the custody, and with the knowledge, of another in whose lot it was pastured, and subsequently in the daytime and in the presence of several witnesses, sold it to another who took bill of sale from defendant. Dillon v. State, 18 So. 2d 457 (Miss. 1944).

In prosecution for larceny of three yearlings and a cow, testimony held not to sustain conviction of grand larceny. Pitts v. State, 115 Miss. 189, 76 So. 140 (1917).

In grand larceny taking of property of sufficient value to constitute the offense must be shown beyond all reasonable doubt. Francis v. State, 87 Miss. 493, 39 So. 897 (1906).

Value must be proved or a conviction of grand larceny at least will be set aside. Stokes v. State, 58 Miss. 677 (1881).

16. Inference from possession of stolen property.

Evidence that defendant possessed fruits of a burglary on the same day it occurred, and concealed the true origin of one of the stolen items, was sufficient to support his conviction of grand larceny in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41(1). Taylor v. State, 110 So. 3d 776 (Miss. 2013).

If the defendant's explanation as to how property which he is charged with stealing came into his possession is reasonable and credible, the burden is on the prosecution to prove its falsity; but if it is unreasonable or improbable, the burden of proving its truth is on the accused. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

Inability to satisfactorily account for possession of stolen property warrants conviction of larceny. Wilson v. State, 237 Miss. 294, 114 So. 2d 677 (1959).

Presumption of guilt of larceny arises from possession of stolen property only where the elapsed time was so short as to render it reasonably certain that there could have been no intermediate change of possession; and is not applicable where four years intervened between the stealing and the discovery of the property. Minor v. State, 234 Miss. 140, 106 So. 2d 41 (1958).

The presumption is not one of law, but of fact, and cannot exist where accused's explanation of his possession is satisfactory, or at least raises a reasonable doubt of guilt. Minor v. State, 234 Miss. 140, 106 So. 2d 41 (1958).

The possession of property recently stolen is a circumstance which may be considered by the jury and from which, in the absence of reasonable explanation, the jury may infer guilt of larceny; also the presumption as to the possession of stolen property unexplained includes the element of asportation. Hoke v. State, 232 Miss. 329, 98 So. 2d 886 (1957).

Where there is any substantial dispute as to the possession of the stolen property by the accused, the better practice is to instruct that if the jury believes that the defendant was in possession of the property, which was recently stolen, such possession is a circumstance which may be considered and from which, in the absence of a reasonable explanation, the jury may infer guilt of larceny. Fogle v. State, 231 Miss. 746, 97 So. 2d 645 (1957).

Presumption, if any, arising from recent possession of stolen truck, cannot be invoked in prosecution for grand larceny of truck when defendant's explanation of possession is reasonable. Hubbard v. State, 41 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1949).

Possession of recently stolen truck by defendant in prosecution for grand larceny is reasonably explained by testimony that he accompanied his brother in truck to nearby town at invitation of brother and at request of brother returned truck to garage of owner, without any knowledge of how brother came into possession of truck, and explanation precludes invocation of presumption, if any, arising from recent possession of stolen truck. Hubbard v. State, 41 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1949).

Presumption of guilt arises from possession of recently stolen property, provided that the proof is sufficient to establish that the money was in fact stolen, and that the accused failed to give a reasonable explanation of his possession of such property. Haney v. State, 199 Miss. 568, 24 So. 2d 778 (1946).

Recent possession of stolen property raises a presumption of guilt, to be considered by the jury in connection with the reasonableness of the explanation of such possession. McDougal v. State, 199 Miss. 39, 23 So. 2d 920 (1945).

Possession of an article must be recent, after it is missed, in order to impute guilt of larceny. Calhoun v. State, 191 Miss. 82, 2 So. 2d 802 (1941).

While the recent possession of stolen property is a circumstance which may be considered and from which, in the absence of a reasonable explanation, the jury may infer guilt, yet the law does not raise a presumption of guilt from such possession and it is error to instruct that it does. Harper v. State, 71 Miss. 202, 13 So. 882 (1893).

No definite length of time after loss of goods and before possession shown in accused seems to be settled as raising a presumption of guilt; the possession must however be recent and in such case if the party fail satisfactorily to account for his possession of stolen goods, the presumption which is one of fact will warrant his conviction of larceny. If a reasonable account be given, the state must show it to be false; if it be unreasonable, the accused must show its truth. Davis v. State, 50 Miss. 86 (1874); Jones v. State, 51 Miss. 718, 24 Am. R. 658 (1875); Foster v. State, 52 Miss. 695 (1876); Stokes v. State, 58 Miss. 677 (1881); Matthews v. State, 61 Miss. 155 (1883); Snowden v. State, 62 Miss. 100 (1884).

17. Instructions, generally.

In a grand larceny prosecution, wherein the defendant was accused of stealing 530 gallons of insecticide of the value of $1,645.00, the trial court did not err in giving the state an instruction as to larceny only of a 55-gallon drum of insecticide of the value of $415.50. Hoke v. State, 232 Miss. 329, 98 So. 2d 886 (1957).

In prosecution for grand larceny, modification, by insertion of words "as a gift," of instruction requested by defendants to effect that if victim gave money to defendant they would not be guilty of larceny is not error when it is shown that victim delivered money to defendant to establish his right to participate equally in a fund alleged to have been found, and evidence shows that all parties understood money was to be returned to victim with one-third of found sum. Garvin v. State, 207 Miss. 751, 43 So. 2d 209 (1949).

Instructions in prosecution under indictment charging grand larceny of two young cows are not erroneous as charging separate larcenies, one for stealing blue heifer and another for stealing red heifer, or as referring jury to indictment for description of cattle charged to have been stolen, when one instruction referred to "a heifer or heifers as charged in the indictment" and another instruction referred to "the cows here in question", and when one heifer of value of $75 was identified as the property stolen, the value being more than $25, a case of grand larceny is shown. Kirby v. State, 206 Miss. 231, 39 So. 2d 770 (1949).

Instruction in prosecution for grand larceny assuming disputed facts, that the property belongs to the prosecuting witness and that it was of the value of more than $25, was erroneous. Marble v. State, 195 Miss. 386, 15 So. 2d 693 (1943).

Instruction omitting element of felonious or fraudulent taking, error. Dedeaux v. State, 125 Miss. 326, 87 So. 664 (1921).

18. —Intent.

In a prosecution for grand larceny for theft of an automobile, the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury that a necessary element of the crime of grand larceny was that the defendant must have intended to permanently deprive the owner of his automobile, where the court instructed the jury that it should find the defendant guilty of grand larceny if he "did feloniously take, steal, and carry away the property," since the word "feloniously" means done with criminal intent. Deal v. State, 589 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 1991).

19. —Circumstantial evidence.

Defendant was entitled to a circumstantial evidence instruction on charges of house burglary and grand larceny. Defendant's testimony that he tried to persuade friends not to commit the burglary and an officer's testimony that defendant was driving a stolen van in which stolen items were found was circumstantial, and no eyewitnesses were presented. Kirkwood v. State, 52 So. 3d 1184 (Miss. 2011).

In a prosecution for grand larceny for the theft of an automobile, the testimony of a highway patrol officer was sufficient to support the denial of a circumstantial evidence instruction, even though the statements were denied, where the officer testified that the defendant told him he had been driving the automobile in question, the defendant told the officer that his papers were in the glove compartment, the officer retrieved the papers and asked the defendant his name, the defendant responded that his name was on the papers, the officer made up a fictitious name and asked the defendant if that was his name, and the defendant responded affirmatively. Deal v. State, 589 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 1991).

Where there was direct proof by the admission of the accused that he had shot the calf which he was accused of stealing and that he and his companion had butchered it and transported it to Louisiana, the case was not one of circumstantial evidence requiring inclusion in the instructions the phrase "beyond every other reasonable hypothesis." Burgess v. State, 245 Miss. 1, 145 So. 2d 160 (1962).

In a prosecution for larceny in which guilty intent is an element and in which the defense was that accused was too drunk to know what he was doing, it is error to charge that voluntary intoxication is no defense. Best v. State, 235 Miss. 318, 108 So. 2d 840 (1959).

20. —Lesser included offense.

In a prosecution for grand larceny for theft of an automobile, the trial court correctly refused an instruction on the lesser included offense of trespass where the defendant did not claim that he was joyriding or that he was using the vehicle for a brief period and expected to return it, but rather, his defense was an alibi that he was not present when the automobile was stolen. Deal v. State, 589 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 1991).

In a prosecution for grand larceny based on the taking of $750 from a cash drawer in a bank, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request for a jury instruction regarding the lesser included offense of petit larceny, even though no witness could testify to actually seeing more than $100 being taken. Ford v. State, 555 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 1989).

21. —Evidence of trespass.

The court properly refused the accused's tendered instruction that if the property allegedly stolen was shown to have been taken openly and in the presence of third persons, it would be only evidence of trespass, where there was no evidence that the property was taken openly in the presence of other persons. Crouse v. State, 229 Miss. 15, 89 So. 2d 919 (1956).

Refusing to grant defendant's requested instructions in grand larceny prosecution that if the property alleged to have been stolen is shown to have been taken openly and in the presence of the owner or third persons then this carries with it only evidence of trespass was not error in view of the court's other instructions which cured the defect. Oakman v. State, 206 Miss. 136, 39 So. 2d 777 (1949).

Where defense in prosecution for grand larceny against defendant who allegedly bought five cows and took six was his bona fide belief that he purchased the extra cow and there was no question that this animal was taken with an intent to retain and control it, failure of the court to instruct jury as to the alternative of criminal trespass was held not error. Oakman v. State, 206 Miss. 136, 39 So. 2d 777 (1949).

Where the sum of $1500 was taken from the complaining witness clandestinely by means of a confidence game whereby the defendant and others represented that the complaining witness' money would be manufactured into bills of larger denominations, a requested instruction that if the money was openly taken in the presence of the owner, that of itself was only evidence of trespass, was properly refused. Holt v. State, 186 Miss. 727, 191 So. 673 (1939).

22. —Possession of stolen property.

Instruction in grand larceny prosecution that possession of recently stolen property was presumptive proof of defendant's guilt of larceny, and the burden of explaining or accounting for such possession was cast upon the defendant, and when satisfactory explanation was not given, the jury would be warranted in finding him guilty, constituted reversible error. Hall v. State, 279 So. 2d 915 (Miss. 1973).

Where there is any substantial dispute as to the possession of the stolen property by the accused, the better practice is to instruct that if the jury believes from the evidence beyond every reasonable doubt that the defendant was in possession of the property and that such property was recently stolen, such possession is a circumstance which may be considered by the jury and from which, in the absence of a reasonable explanation, the jury may infer guilt of larceny. Fogle v. State, 231 Miss. 746, 97 So. 2d 645 (1957).

Instruction that possession of property recently stolen is circumstance which may be considered by jury and from which, in absence of reasonable explanation, jury may infer guilt of larceny, is not error when proof shows that the property was stolen; that the property found in possession of accused was the stolen property; that possession was recently after the larceny and that accused's possession was personal, conscious, exclusive and unexplained by direct or circumstantial evidence which would rebut presumption of taking by accused. Lott v. State, 204 Miss. 610, 37 So. 2d 782 (1948).

In grand larceny prosecution for stealing purse containing several $20 bills where undisputed evidence showed that defendant was in possession of a $20 bill positively identified as having been among the bills stolen, court erred in instructing jury that they could not find defendant guilty of a greater offense than that of petit larceny inasmuch as the testimony showed that not more than one $20 bill came into possession of defendant, since the jury was entitled to believe from all the circumstances that whoever stole the $20 bill also stole the remaining contents of the purse. Haney v. State, 199 Miss. 568, 24 So. 2d 778 (1946).

23. Verdict.

Verdict finding defendant guilty as “accessory to the crime” was too vague, uncertain and indefinite to support a conviction of grand larceny, where the evidence pointed strongly to another who actually took the money, since it could not be ascertained whether the jury meant, by “accessory,” that defendant was guilty as accessory before or after the larceny or that the defendant had received the money from another knowing it to have been stolen, and the defects of the verdict were not cured by statute pertaining to jeofails. McDougal v. State, 199 Miss. 39, 23 So. 2d 920 (1945).

Where indictment charged grand larceny in second count, and jury was instructed to find accused not guilty of the first count, finding accused “guilty as charged in the second count in the indictment” not objectionable as failing to show crime defendant found guilty of. Lemon v. State, 95 Miss. 526, 49 So. 515 (1909).

24. Sentence and punishment.

In a case in which defendant had been sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment as a habitual offender after violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93, defendant unsuccessfully argued that her sentence was unconstitutional as it exceeded the maximum sentence allowed by law. As she was a habitual offender, the circuit court was required under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 to impose the maximum sentence for grand larceny, which, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41, was 10 years and a fine of $ 10,000. Williams v. State, 24 So. 3d 360 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err by imposing sentences of five years for conspiracy, 25 years for burglary of a dwelling, five years for grand larceny, and 20 years for first degree arson, as these were all the maximum sentences allowed for these crimes. McCullins v. State, 952 So. 2d 305 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court affirmed defendant’s conviction and the sentence imposed, as the trial court did not err by allowing the State to amend the indictment to correct the section number to reflect that defendant was being charged with felony shoplifting, and a five year sentence did not exceed the maximum punishment in Miss.

Code Ann. § 97-17-41. Watson v. State, 939 So. 2d 806 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 592 (Miss. 2006).

Where an inmate was sentenced for two counts of grand larceny and could have received a maximum sentence of ten years in the custody of Mississippi Department of Corrections, but instead, the trial court suspended five years of the ten year sentence, leaving five years of incarceration to serve, with two years of post-release supervision, the inmate’s sentence was not illegal. Thus, the trial court properly denied the inmate’s motion for post-conviction relief. Hill v. State, 912 So. 2d 494 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Denial of the inmate’s petition for post-conviction relief was proper where his argument that his grand larceny sentence was in excess of the five-year maximum allowed under law because he was not given credit for the five months he served should first be addressed to the Department of Corrections. In the event that he was denied credit for that time served, then he should seek redress in the courts. Gable v. State, 919 So. 2d 1075 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41 does not provide a minimum sentence for grand larceny. Because the statute set no minimum penalty, the court was not obligated to inform defendant of the minimum sentence for grand larceny; hence, defendant’s petition for postconviction relief was properly denied after defendant pled guilty to two counts of grand larceny and one count of possession of cocaine. Dockens v. State, 879 So. 2d 1072 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where an indictment for burglary, charged larceny not as a substantive offense but as demonstrative of burglarious intent, it was erroneous upon conviction to impose a separate sentence for larceny, and the sentence for larceny would be deleted as surplusage, without affecting the sentence for burglary. Bullock v. State, 222 So. 2d 692 (Miss. 1969).

Where the record showed that the defendant was tried on an indictment charging grand larceny, the instructions of the court were on grand larceny, and the jury’s verdict, finding defendant guilty as charged, was justified by the evidence, a statement appearing in the judgment of the court imposing sentence to the effect that defendant had been tried and found guilty on a charge of false pretenses was merely a clerical error, not requiring reversal. Jones v. State, 244 Miss. 596, 145 So. 2d 446 (1962).

In prosecution for grand larceny, an order indefinitely postponing sentence after a plea of guilty did not result in loss of court's jurisdiction to impose sentence even after a period of five years, at least, in the absence of motion by defendant to be allowed to withdraw his plea of guilty. Crump v. Trapp, 210 Miss. 905, 36 So. 2d 459 (1948).

25. Miscellaneous.

Convictions for both murder during course of armed robbery and grand larceny violated double jeopardy prohibition against multiple punishments for same offense, where robbery charge, which was used to elevate case to capital murder, encompassed elements of grand larceny. Holly v. State, 671 So. 2d 32 (Miss. 1996), post-conviction relief denied, cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1025, 116 S. Ct. 2565, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1082 (1996), reh'g denied, 518 U.S. 1048, 117 S. Ct. 26, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1119 (1996).

In a prosecution for grand larceny, evidence that the defendant kept a $13,860 check erroneously issued and sent to him, and subsequently used it to pay off debts, raised a factual issue for the jury as to whether he had the requisite intent to wrongfully keep the money. State v. Smith, 652 So. 2d 1126 (Miss. 1995).

The trial court is not authorized or required to appoint counsel for a defendant accused of grand larceny, a noncapital felony. Fogle v. State, 231 Miss. 746, 97 So. 2d 645 (1957).

The conflict in testimony as to whether an alleged confession, made by the accused charged with grand larceny, was free and voluntary, including the fact that the confession was made while the accused was under arrest and confined in jail without a warrant, were questions for decision by the trial judge on a preliminary hearing. Crouse v. State, 229 Miss. 15, 89 So. 2d 919 (1956).

Where testimony of three alleged accomplices was sufficient to convict defendant of grand larceny of cattle, but on motion for new trial all three alleged accomplices repudiated their testimony after being advised by trial court of their right not to incriminate themselves by an admission of perjury and that they could be sent to the penitentiary if they should falsely repudiate their former testimony, such repudiation when considered in the light of testimony of an alibi and the good reputation of defendant as a law abiding citizen warranted reversal of conviction and remand for new trial. Gathings v. State, 46 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 1950); Quinn v. State, 46 So. 2d 802 (Miss. 1950).

Judgment in grand larceny prosecution merely stating that defendant was tried by twelve good and lawful men, without adjudicating that they composed a jury was not invalid where record showed accused was tried and convicted by a jury in judicial proceeding. Watts v. State, 209 Miss. 322, 46 So. 2d 789 (1950).

§ 97-17-42. Larceny; taking possession of or taking away a motor vehicle; second or subsequent offense.

(1) Any person who shall, willfully and without authority, take possession of or take away a motor vehicle of any value belonging to another, with intent to either permanently or temporarily convert it or to permanently or temporarily deprive the owner of possession or ownership, and any person who knowingly shall aid and abet in the taking possession or taking away of the motor vehicle, shall be guilty of larceny and shall be punished based on the value of the motor vehicle involved according to the schedule in Section

97-17-41. If the value of the motor vehicle involved is One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or less, the person shall be punished according to the schedule in Section 97-17-43.

(2) Any person convicted under this section who causes damage to any motor vehicle shall be ordered by the court to pay restitution to the owner or owners of the motor vehicle or vehicles damaged.

(3) This section shall not apply to the enforcement of a security interest in a motor vehicle.

(4) Any person who shall be convicted for a second or subsequent offense under this section shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding twice the term authorized based on the value of the motor vehicle involved in the subsequent offense according to the schedule in Section 97-17-41 or shall be fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

Amendment Notes — The 2014 amendment, in (1), substituted “larceny and shall be punished based on the value of the motor vehicle involved according to the schedule in Section 97-17-41” for “a felony and shall be punished by commitment to the Department of Corrections for not more than ten (10) years” in the first sentence and added the second sentence; and in (4), substituted “twice the term authorized based on the value of the motor vehicle involved in the subsequent offense according to the schedule in Section 97-17-41” for “fifteen (15) years.”

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Sufficiency of evidence.
3. Defense of necessity.

1. In general.

Indictment explicitly stated that defendant was being charged with motor vehicle theft under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-42; there was no evidence presented that defendant was surprised or that he did not know, to his prejudice, that he was being prosecuted under § 97-17-42 for motor vehicle theft; therefore, there being no prejudice or surprise, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting an on-the-record amendment of the indictment. Mixon v. State, 921 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court properly rejected tendered instruction that required the jury in a prosecution for violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-42 that the jury must have known that the vehicle in question was stolen took possession; the tendered instruction was an improper statement of the law as guilty knowledge was not an element of the offense. Johnson v. State, 823 So. 2d 582 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Defendant did not show that he was prejudiced by the mistaken inclusion of the dollar amount of the vehicle in the indictment for motor vehicle theft under this section that is required under § 97-17-41(1) for grand larceny; he was not unaware of what crime he was charged with committing or unable to prepare an adequate defense because of the indictment. Richmond v. State, 751 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. 1999).

It is within the province of the legislature to proscribe certain acts as malum prohibitum with no required mens rea as this statute does, and the legislature's failure to set out a mens rea does not automatically render the statute unconstitutional. Richmond v. State, 751 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. 1999).

2. Sufficiency of evidence.

Defendant's convictions for house burglary, aggravated assault, armed robbery, and auto theft were proper because the evidence was sufficient. In part, defendant severely beat the victim, demanded that she give him her purse, and then took her purse, a gun, and a set of keys to the victim's vehicle. The victim later identified defendant, based upon her own independent recollection, in a photographic lineup. Brunner v. State, 37 So. 3d 645 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 36 So. 3d 455, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 323 (Miss. 2010).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion for a new trial based on defendant's argument that the guilty verdicts were based on insufficient evidence and/or were contrary to law or the weight of the evidence because: (1) allowing the conviction for convicted-felon-in-possession-of-firearm charge in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-37-5(1) (Rev. 2006) to stand would not have been prejudicial to defendant since all of the evidence pointed to defendant, a prior convicted felon, being in possession of a firearm while not under duress, a conclusion that could have been reached by any rational juror; and (2) since there was conflicting testimony in the case, reasonable and fairminded jurors in the exercise of impartial judgment could have reached different conclusions as to the verdict, thus resulting in the appellate court's finding that there was legally sufficient evidence to convict defendant of motor-vehicle theft Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-42(1) (Rev. 2006). Davis v. State, 18 So. 3d 842 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for motor vehicle theft was appropriate because the testimony placed defendant in the stolen vehicle during the dealership's summer sale and established that he drove the vehicle off of the auto lot without the authority to do so; although defendant claimed that he was given permission to use the vehicle and his testimony was corroborated by a witness, the jury was the final judge of witness credibility. Carter v. State, 963 So. 2d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case in which defendant and two accomplices had taken four school buses for the purpose of playing demolition derby, defendant's argument failed on appeal that insufficient evidence supported his conviction on two counts of taking a motor vehicle because the state failed to identify with sufficient specificity the buses involved in the incident; the state proved that the buses belonged to a school district through the testimony of the investigating officer and through photographs of the buses. Hendrix v. State, 957 So. 2d 1023 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant, convicted for stealing a car, argued on appeal that because the State did not call the co-owner of the sales lot to testify that he did not give defendant permission to take the car, reasonable doubt existed regarding whether the co-owner gave defendant permission to take the station wagon. Defendant was attacking the sufficiency of the evidence, rather than its weight — however, the issue of whether the co-owner gave defendant permission to take the car created a question of fact for the jury to resolve and the appellate court's standard of review prevented it from substituting its conclusion for the jury's, so the jury's decision stood. Allen v. State, 906 So. 2d 802 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant was shown to have been in close proximity to the stolen vehicle and to have made statements to at least two individuals consistent with a claim of ownership or, at a minimum, the right to possession of the vehicle; defendant's claim of right of possession, plainly refuted by testimony, was direct evidence implicating defendant, and the trial court was plainly correct in denying a circumstantial evidence instruction and also properly admitted a knife found on defendant's person, probative of how the vehicle may have been started without a key. Parks v. State, 859 So. 2d 1084 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Because (1) the evidence showed that, while police attempted to arrest defendant on an outstanding warrant, defendant jumped into a vehicle, twice drove the vehicle to strike a police officer, and then defendant drove the vehicle into another police officer vehicle, causing injury, and (2) the court was not persuaded that the evidence tending to demonstrate defendant's innocence was of such weight that it constituted a substantial miscarriage of justice to permit the present verdicts to stand, the court affirmed defendant's convictions of taking possession of or taking away a motor vehicle and aggravated assault on a law enforcement officer. Hogan v. State, 854 So. 2d 497 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

3. Defense of necessity.

Defense of necessity to the charge of the motor vehicle theft was supported by the evidence and was not mentioned anywhere else in the jury instructions, and because it was not addressed in jury instructions, defendant suffered an injustice since the denial of that instruction prevented defendant's proof-grounded theory of the case from being presented. Therefore, the failure of the trial judge to instruct the jury on the defense of necessity was not harmless error and could have been the difference between defendant being found guilty of motor-vehicle theft in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-42(1) (Rev. 2006), or not, and thus denied defendant his right to a fair trial. Davis v. State, 18 So. 3d 842 (Miss. 2009).

§ 97-17-43. Petit larceny defined; penalty.

(1) If any person shall feloniously take, steal and carry away any personal property of another under the value of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), he shall be guilty of petit larceny and, upon conviction, may be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six (6) months or by a fine not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both. The total value of property taken, stolen or carried away by the person from a single victim shall be aggregated in determining the gravity of the offense. Any person convicted of a third or subsequent offense under this section where the value of the property is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding three (3) years or fined an amount not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both.

(2) If any person shall feloniously take, steal and carry away any property of a church, synagogue, temple or other established place of worship under the value of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), he shall be guilty of petit larceny and, upon conviction, may be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one (1) year or by fine not exceeding Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00), or both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine not exceeding Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00), or both. Any person convicted of a third or subsequent offense under this section where the value of the property is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding three (3) years or fined an amount not exceeding Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00), or both.

(3) Any person who leaves the premises of an establishment at which motor fuel offered for retail sale was dispensed into the fuel tank of a motor vehicle by driving away in that motor vehicle without having made due payment or authorized charge for the motor fuel so dispensed, with intent to defraud the retail establishment, shall be guilty of petit larceny and punished as provided in subsection (1) of this section and, upon any second or subsequent such offense, the driver's license of the person shall be suspended as follows:

(a) The person shall submit the driver's license to the court upon conviction and the court shall forward the driver's license to the Department of Public Safety.

(b) The first suspension of a driver's license under this subsection shall be for a period of six (6) months.

(c) A second or subsequent suspension of a driver's license under this subsection shall be for a period of one (1) year.

(d) At the expiration of the suspension period, and upon payment of a restoration fee of Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00), the suspension shall terminate and the Department of Public Safety shall return the person's driver's license to the person. The restoration fee shall be in addition to the fees provided for in Title 63, Chapter 1, and shall be deposited into the State General Fund in accordance with Section 45-1-23.

1. In general.

In defendant's cocaine possession case, the trial judge clearly erred by allowing the State to impeach a vital defense witness with a misdemeanor petty-larceny conviction; because the issue of whether defendant possessed cocaine turned entirely on whether the jury believed the witness, the damage required reversal. Baskin v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 68 (Miss. Jan. 30, 2014).

Fact that Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33(2) and Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-43(2) provide harsher penalties for crimes committed in places of worship does not amount to government endorsement of religion; therefore, they do not violate the Establishment Clause. Dimaio v. State, 951 So. 2d 581 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Lesser-included offense of petit larceny was not warranted where there was sufficient testimony for the jury to conclude the value of the stolen carburetor exceeded $250, as there was evidence from the owner that the carburetor was worth $1000, and the replacement cost $400. Nelson v. State, 839 So. 2d 584 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction and judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied by the trial court where considering the strength of all inferences and circumstances of possession by defendant of the victim's check, together with his attempt to negotiate the check at the bank, the jury was fully warranted in concluding that defendant was guilty of uttering a forged instrument and petit larceny. Miles v. State, 864 So. 2d 963 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for grand larceny based on the taking of $750 from a cash drawer in a bank, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request for a jury instruction regarding the lesser included offense of petit larceny, even though no witness could testify to actually seeing more than $100 being taken. Ford v. State, 555 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 1989).

Evidence was insufficient to support finding beyond reasonable doubt that value of stolen property was in excess of $100; therefore, defendant should have been sentenced for offense of petit larceny, where in affidavit sworn out in justice court, value of property was set at $90, while at trial testimony regarding value of stolen property was inconsistent. Dulin v. State, 507 So. 2d 897 (Miss. 1987).

Contraband liquor may be the subject of larceny. Passons v. State, 208 Miss. 545, 45 So. 2d 131 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Simmons v. State, 568 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1990).

Petit larceny statute and statute respecting larceny by severing fixtures are separate statutes containing separate and distinct elements to constitute crime. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

2. Affidavit charging offense.

The use of the word "feloniously" in describing larceny is not merely descriptive of the grade of the offense, but is an essential ingredient of the crime. Austin v. State, 195 Miss. 317, 15 So. 2d 684 (1943).

Affidavit charging that accused "did then and there unlawfully take, steal and carry away" certain personal property was fatally defective for omitting the word "feloniously" in describing larceny, and such omission going to the very essence of the offense might be availed of for the first time on appeal. Austin v. State, 195 Miss. 317, 15 So. 2d 684 (1943).

Affidavit charging defendant with stealing tomato plants valued at $17, personal property of person named, charged offense under petit larceny statute. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

Where affidavit charges petit larceny by alleging different articles stolen to be property of different persons, on trial state will be compelled to show a single asportation. Ward v. State, 90 Miss. 249, 43 So. 466 (1907); State v. Dalton, 91 Miss. 162, 44 So. 802 (1907); State v. Quintini, 51 So. 276 (Miss. 1910).

3. —Variance between affidavit and proof.

In a prosecution for larceny of a CB radio, speaker and antenna, the conviction would be affirmed only as to petit larceny where the evidence consisted of testimony from the victim that his used radio was worth at least $150, which assessment was contradicted by a defense witness who sold new and used radios and who stated that the stolen radio was not worth as much as $100 on the open market. Barry v. State, 406 So. 2d 45 (Miss. 1981).

Where affidavit charged offense under petit larceny statute, but proof showed offense under statute respecting larceny in severing fixtures, court should have granted peremptory instruction and held accused under bond for further proceedings. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

Where affidavit charged stealing of tomato plants as personal property, offense under petit larceny statute, proof showing plants were growing when stolen proved different offense, and conviction could not be pleaded as res judicata against new trial under statute respecting larceny in severing fixtures. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

4. Malicious Prosecution.

Summary judgment was properly granted in favor of a former employer in a malicious prosecution case because there was probable cause to arrest a former employee for petit larceny based on the act of alerting a customer to cash in a token in a slot machine; moreover, there was no evidence that a former employer acted with malice by having the employee arrested for the theft. Croft v. Grand Casino Tunica, Inc., 910 So. 2d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

5. Sufficient Evidence.

Defendant's conviction for grand larceny in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-43 was proper where one of his co-defendants testified that he and defendant were together in his brother's trailer, devising the plan to steal cigarettes, on the morning that the larceny took place. Two other co-defendants testified as to the incriminating statements made by defendant after the crime had occurred. Ross v. State, 914 So. 2d 814 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

§ 97-17-47. Larceny; severing crops, or parts of improvements or enclosures.

If any person shall sever from the soil of another any produce growing thereon, or shall sever from any building, gate, fence, railing, or other improvement or enclosure any part thereof, and shall take and convert the same to his own use with intent to steal the same, he shall be guilty of larceny in the same manner and of the same degree as if the article so taken had been severed at some previous and different time and shall be punished based on the value of the property involved according to the schedule in Sections 97-17-41 and 97-17-43.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Affidavit charging offense.

1. In general.

Where two butane gas heaters were placed in the auditorium of the church and they were bolted or screwed onto the pipes which had been run under and through the floor and which carried gas, the gas heaters were not fixtures and defendant was properly indicted under Code 1942, § 2240, which deals with common-law larceny of personal property, instead of this section [Code 1942, § 2246]. Garrett v. State, 213 Miss. 328, 56 So. 2d 809 (1952).

Petit larceny statute and statute respecting larceny by severing fixtures are separate statutes containing separate and distinct elements to constitute crime.

O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

2. Affidavit charging offense.

Where affidavit charged offense under petit larceny statute, but proof showed offense under statute respecting larceny in severing fixtures, court should have granted peremptory instruction and held accused under bond for further proceedings. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

Where affidavit charged stealing of tomato plants as personal property, offense under petit larceny statute, proof showing plants were growing when stolen proved different offense, and conviction could not be pleaded as res judicata against new trial under statute respecting larceny in severing fixtures. O'Neal v. State, 166 Miss. 538, 146 So. 634 (1933).

§ 97-17-53. Larceny; knowing and willful stealing or carrying away of livestock; obtaining livestock by means of fraudulent conduct; prima facie evidence of fraudulent conduct; restitution.

(1)(a) If any person shall knowingly, willfully and feloniously take, steal and carry away livestock of any value belonging to another without the consent of the owner, he is guilty of larceny and punishable pursuant to Section 97-17-41 or 97-17-43 depending on the gravity of the offense. The total value of the livestock obtained from the individual owner or merchant shall be aggregated in determining the gravity of the offense.

(b) If any person obtains livestock belonging to another by means of any fraudulent conduct, practice or representation, he is guilty of fraud and punishable pursuant to Section 97-19-39. The total value of the livestock obtained from the individual owner or merchant shall be aggregated in determining the gravity of the offense.

(c) Obtaining livestock from a commission merchant or livestock owner by representing that prompt payment will be made pursuant to Section 409 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 7 USCS Section 228b, and failing to make prompt payment in accordance therewith, shall constitute prima facie evidence of fraudulent conduct, practices or representation.

(2) In addition to any such fine or imprisonment which may be imposed, the court shall order that restitution be made to the owner of any such stolen livestock. The measure for restitution in money shall be the amount of the actual financial loss to the owner of the livestock, including any loss of income, any court costs and attorney's fees incurred by the owner to recover the stolen livestock, the current replacement value of the stolen livestock if the livestock is not recovered, and any other costs incurred by the owner as a result of actions in violation of subsection (1) of this section.

(3) For purposes of this section, the term "livestock" means horses, cattle, swine, sheep and other domestic animals produced for profit.

Amendment Notes — The 2013 amendment rewrote (1)(a) to revise the crime of theft of livestock to include the knowing and willful stealing or carrying away of livestock as larceny; added (1)(b) and (c); and made a minor stylistic change.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Evidence.

1. In general.

Where three defendants are charged with the larceny of a cow, but there is no evidence that a cow was missing or that a cow was stolen, and the only evidence that a crime had been committed were the confessions of each defendant implicating the other defendants, the evidence is insufficient to sustain a criminal conviction; the state must prove the corpus delicti of the body of a crime by showing that the subject crime charged did in fact occur; the confession of one criminally accused will not suffice to sustain a conviction absent proof of the body of the crime. Bullock v. State, 447 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. 1984).

Evidence in a prosecution for larceny of a cow under this section was insufficient as a matter of law to establish the corpus delicti, where each of the three defendants who had been jointly indicted, tried and convicted, had confessed, where the confession of each implicated the others, and where there was no independent proof that a cow was missing from the herd of the alleged victim, in that the confessions of the defendants could not be used against each other. Bullock v. State, 447 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution for larceny of a cow the defendant was improperly convicted of such crime, where at the time the men arrived at the cow's location it was dead, where there was no evidence placing the defendant at the scene when the cow was killed, where there was no evidence that the cow had been shot, and where there was no testimony or evidence from which it might reasonably have been inferred that the defendant killed the cow or had knowledge that the cow did not belong to the person who had sought his assistance in moving the cow. Sessums v. State, 419 So. 2d 189 (Miss. 1982).

In a prosecution for larceny of a black Angus heifer belonging to another, the trial court erred in refusing a defense instruction based upon § 97-17-61 where the defendant presented evidence that he had accidentally struck the heifer with his automobile, that the animal had been killed with a gunshot to put it out of its misery, and that he and others had taken the carcass and had it cut, wrapped and divided four ways; since the defendant's proof tended to establish that there was no intent to appropriate the cow at any time before it was shot, thereby negating the crime of larceny, the trial judge in effect peremptorily instructed the jury to disregard the defendant's defense when he refused the requested instruction. Knowles v. State, 410 So. 2d 380 (Miss. 1982).

An indictment charging the larceny of a "neat calf" was in compliance with that part of the section which states that if any person shall feloniously take, steal and carry away any of the kind of neat or horned cattle, he shall be guilty of larceny. Miller v. State, 243 So. 2d 558 (Miss. 1971).

The larceny of cattle being a felony under this section [Code 1942, § 2242], an indictment for cattle-stealing need not allege value. Pearson v. State, 248 Miss. 353, 158 So. 2d 710 (1963).

2. Evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where (1) the two victims both testified they had cows stolen from their fields and that this taking was in no way consensual, (2) an investigator testified that he was able to verify that one of the cows had been sold under the name of the defendant and the two cows which had not yet been sold were left under the name of his fiancée, and (3) the investigator also testified that the defendant confessed to the crime. Forrest v. State, 782 So. 2d 1260 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

(2) Any person who shall knowingly, willfully and feloniously take, steal and carry away from the lands of another any merchantable timber on the property of another, of the value of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00) or more, whether such timber is growing, standing, or lying on the lands, shall be guilty of a felony; and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) nor more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or by imprisonment in the Penitentiary for a term of not less than one (1) year nor more than five (5) years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

(3) In addition to any such fine or imprisonment which may be imposed upon a convicted individual, the court shall order that restitution be made to the owner of any such stolen timber. The measure for restitution in money shall be the amount of the actual financial loss to the owner of the timber, including any loss of income, any court costs, expert fees and attorney's fees incurred by the owner to recover the loss and any other costs incurred by the owner as a result of actions in violation of subsections (1) and (2) of this section. The value of the timber shall be calculated by the fair market value of the timber at the time of the loss.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence of value.

2. Evidence held sufficient.

3. Intent.

1. Evidence of value.

Where defendant's logger testified that he carried logs from the victim's property to mills and that the timber sold for approximately $ 21,000, the victim's failure to assign value to the stolen timber was irrelevant, as the evidence established a timber value in excess of $ 250. Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App.

2003).

2. Evidence held sufficient.

Defendant's indictment for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-59(2) was not fatally defective because the use of the term "harvest" in the indictment was an adequate replacement for the term "carried away." Pollard v. State, 932 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

There was no substantial doubt as to which statute applied to defendant's case, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-59(2) or Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-81, because the inclusion in defendant's indictment of the phrase "wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously," and the inclusion of the value of the stolen timber, $1,226, made it apparent that defendant was charged pursuant to the felony statute; the indictment also alleged a "felonious" intent on defendant's part. Pollard v. State, 932 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where there was evidence that defendant ignored the victim's clear withholding of permission to cut timber, that he removed the timber, and there was testimony and documentary evidence of the timber's value, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict; his conviction was not contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

3. Intent.

Defendant's conviction of larceny of timber under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-59(2) was reversed because use of the word "or" instead of "and" in jury instruction allowed him to be convicted upon proof that he merely cut the property owner's timber or authorized his employees to cut her timber; such a showing alone would be insufficient to sustain a conviction of timber larceny, as the instruction did not account for other elements of the crime, such as intent. Pollard v. State, 932 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Victim's testimony that he denied giving permission to anybody to cut timber in the area where defendant had done so was sufficient to prove that defendant had the requisite intent, even though defendant testified that he had permission; the credibility of these witnesses was for the jury to determine. Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

A conviction for timber larceny under this section is a disqualifying crime pursuant to Section 241 of the Mississippi

§ 97-17-60. Payment for timber acquired for resale; penalties.

(1) Any person who acquires, with the consent of an owner, any timber product from that owner and who receives payment for the timber product shall, within thirty (30) days of such receipt, make payment in full to the owner.

(2) If the owner has not received payment within the required thirty (30) days, the owner shall notify the offender of his demand for payment at the offender's last known address by certified mail or by personal delivery of the written notice to the offender. The offender shall make payment in full within ten (10) days after the mailing or delivery of the written notice or the offender shall be in violation of this section.

(3) A written agreement signed by the owner providing for a means of payment contrary to this section shall constitute an affirmative defense.

(4) For the purposes of this section, the following terms shall have the meanings ascribed to them herein unless the context clearly indicates otherwise:

(a) "Timber product" means timber of all kinds, species or sizes, including, but not limited to, logs, lumber, poles, pilings, posts, blocks, bolts, cordwood and pulpwood, pine stumpwood, pine knots or other distillate wood, crossties, turpentine (crude gum), pine straw, firewood and all other products derived from timber or trees which have a sale or commercial value.

(b) "Owner" means any person, partnership, corporation, unincorporated association or other legal entity having any interest in any timber product, any land upon which a timber product is growing or any land from which a timber product has been removed.

(5) Whoever violates this section, upon conviction thereof, when the value of the timber product is Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or less, shall be fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or imprisoned for not more than one (1) year, or both. When the value of the timber product is more than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), the violator, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or imprisoned for not more than ten (10) years, or both.

§ 97-17-61. Larceny; taking and carrying away certain animals or motor vehicles not amounting to larceny.

Any person who shall, without the consent of the owner or his agent, take away any horse, mare, gelding, mule, jack, jennet, sheep, cow, bull, ox, hog, or other livestock or dog, or automobile, truck or other motor vehicle, where such taking and carrying away shall not amount to larceny, shall upon conviction, be fined not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or be imprisoned not exceeding one (1) year in the county jail, or both. A verdict of guilty of such taking and carrying away may be rendered under an indictment for larceny, if the evidence shall not warrant a verdict of guilty of larceny but shall warrant a conviction under this section. This section shall not apply to anyone who takes such property believing, in good faith, that he has a right to it. The court shall order any person convicted under this section to pay restitution for any damage caused to any property as a result of violating this section.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Court erred in awarding summary judgment to a car dealership in plaintiff's suit for malicious prosecution because a jury could have reasonably found that there was no probable cause for the dealership's initiation of a criminal charge for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle; notwithstanding an agreement whereby plaintiff was to return a vehicle if she could not obtain financing, the vehicle at issue was nevertheless placed in her possession by the dealership. George v. W.W.D. Autos., Inc., 937 So. 2d 958 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a prosecution for larceny of a black Angus heifer belonging to another, the trial court erred in refusing a defense instruction based upon this section where the defendant presented evidence that he had accidentally struck the heifer with his automobile, that the animal had been killed with a gunshot to put it out of its misery, and that he and others had taken the carcass and had it cut, wrapped and divided four ways; since the defendant's proof tended to establish that there was no intent to appropriate the cow at any time before it was shot, thereby negating the crime of larceny, the trial judge in effect peremptorily instructed the jury to disregard the defendant's defense when he refused the requested instruction. Knowles v. State, 410 So. 2d 380 (Miss. 1982).

Where the defendant admitted the wrongful taking of an automobile from a motor company lot, but claimed that he intended only to drive it around that night and then return it, and it was shown that he drove it only within the city limits even after he was given a ticket for driving without a license and tag, such evidence precluded a conviction of grand larceny, but rather indicated an act of trespass less than larceny, since it did not appear that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently. Slay v. State, 241 So. 2d 362 (Miss. 1970).

Evidence failing to indicate that defendant intended to steal truck but at most established offense of trespass less than larceny, was insufficient to warrant conviction of grand larceny. Ephram v. State, 204 Miss. 879, 35 So. 2d 708 (1948).

Person who helped owner of cornfield catch and pen a hog, and after owner refused to pay 50¢ for the hog's keep, paid owner of cornfield 50¢ for the hog and offered to turn it over to its owner upon payment of 50¢, did not violate this section [Code 1942, § 2254]. Husbands v. State, 112 Miss. 17, 72 So. 836 (1916).

Not larceny where defendant directed by owner to take a certain animal took another by mistake. Barnes v. State, 98 Miss. 458, 53 So. 956 (1911).

§ 97-17-62. Larceny; theft of rental property.

(1)(a) It is unlawful to obtain custody of personal property or equipment by trick, deceit, fraud or willful false representation with intent to defraud the owner or any person in lawful possession of the personal property or equipment.

(b) It is unlawful to hire or lease personal property or equipment from any person who is in lawful possession of the personal property or equipment with intent to defraud that person of the rental due under the rental agreement.

(c) It is unlawful to abandon or willfully refuse to redeliver personal property as required under a rental agreement without the consent of the lessor or the lessor's agent with intent to defraud the lessor or the lessor's agent.

(d) A person who violates this subsection (1) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable as provided in Section 97-17-43, unless the value of the personal property or equipment is of a value of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or more; in that event the violation constitutes a felony, and shall be punished based on the property involved according to the schedule in Section 97-17-41.

(2)(a) In prosecutions under this section, the following acts are prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent: obtaining the property or equipment under false pretenses; absconding without payment; or removing or attempting to remove the property or equipment from the county without the express written consent of the lessor or the lessor's agent.

(b) Demand for return of overdue property or equipment and for payment of amounts due may be made personally, by hand delivery, or by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the lessee's address shown in the rental contract.

(c) In a prosecution under subsection (1)(c):

(i) Failure to redeliver the property or equipment within five (5) days after hand delivery to or return receipt from the lessee is prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent. Notice that is returned undelivered after mailing to the address given by the lessee at the time of rental shall be deemed equivalent to return receipt from the lessee.

(ii) Failure to pay any amount due which is incurred as the result of the failure to redeliver property after the rental period expires is prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent. Amounts due include unpaid rental for the time period during which the property or equipment was not returned, and include the lesser of the cost of repairing or replacing the property or equipment, as necessary, if it has been damaged or not returned.

§ 97-17-64. Larceny; under lease or rental agreement.

(1) A person who obtains personal property of another under a lease or rental agreement is guilty of theft if he exercises unlawful or unauthorized control over the property with purpose to deprive the owner thereof. As used in this section, the word "deprive" means to withhold property of another permanently or for so extended a period that a significant portion of its economic value, or the use or benefit thereof, is lost to the owner; or to withhold the property with intent to restore it to the owner only upon payment of a reward or other compensation; or to conceal, abandon or dispose of the property so as to make it unlikely that the owner will recover it; or to sell, give, pledge, or otherwise transfer any interest in the property.

(2) It shall be prima facie evidence of purpose to deprive when a person:

(a) In obtaining such property presents identification or information which is materially false, fictitious, misleading or not current, with respect to such person's name, address, place of employment, or any other material matter; or

(b) Fails to return such property to the owner or his representative within ten (10) days after proper notice following the expiration of the term for which such person's use, possession or control of the property is authorized; or

(c) Fails to contact the owner or his representative to make arrangements to return such property within ten (10) days after proper notice following the expiration of the term for which such person's use, possession or control of such property is authorized.

(3) For the purpose of this section, “proper notice” means either actual notification as may be otherwise proven beyond a reasonable doubt or a written demand for return of the property mailed to the defendant, which satisfies the following procedure:

(a) The written demand must be mailed to the defendant by certified or registered mail with return receipt attached, which return receipt by its terms must be signed by the defendant personally and not by his representative;

(b) The written demand must be mailed to the defendant at either the address given at the time he obtained the property or the defendant’s last-known address if later furnished in writing by the defendant to the owner or his representative; and

(c) The return receipt bearing the defendant’s signature must be returned to the owner or his representative.

(4) It shall be an affirmative defense to prosecution under this section that:

(a) The defendant was unaware that the property was that of another; or

(b) The defendant acted under an honest claim of right to the property involved or that he had a right to acquire or dispose of it as he did; or

(c) The defendant was physically incapacitated and unable to request or obtain permission of the owner to retain the property; or

(d) The property was in such a condition, through no fault of the defendant, that it could not be returned within the requisite time after receipt of proper notice.

(5) Any person convicted of the offense of theft under this section shall be:

(a) Guilty of a misdemeanor when the value of the personal property is less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) and may be punished by a fine of not more than Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not more than six (6) months, by both such fine and imprisonment if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine not exceeding Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00), or both. Any person convicted of a third or subsequent offense under this subsection where the value of the property is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding three (3) years or fined an amount not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00); or

(b) Guilty of a felony when the value of the personal property is One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or more and punished by a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by imprisonment in the State Penitentiary for a term of not more than five (5) years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Amendment Notes — The 2014 amendment, in (5)(a) and (5)(b), substituted “One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00)” for “Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00)” in the first sentence; in (5)(a), inserted “may be” preceding “punished by a fine” and added the language beginning “if the court finds substantial” to the end of the paragraph; in (5)(b), substituted “five (5) years” for “three (3) years” near the end.

§ 97-17-65. Looting.

(1) A person commits looting when he knowingly without authority of law or of the owner enters any home or dwelling, or upon any premises of another, or enters any commercial, mercantile, business or industrial building, plant or establishment, in which a normal security of property is not present by virtue of a hurricane, fire or vis major of any kind or by virtue of a riot, mob, or other human agency and obtains or exerts control over or injures or removes property of the owner.

(2) Any person who commits looting shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, such person shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period not to exceed fifteen (15) years or by a fine not to exceed ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00), or both such fine and imprisonment.

(3) The fact that a person may be subject to prosecution under this section shall not bar his prosecution or punishment under the statutes relating to larceny or burglary, or under any other statute or ordinance to the extent that such would otherwise be permitted in the absence of this section.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The term “normal security” is defined according to its common and ordinary acceptance and meaning. It would remain a fact question in each case as to what the meaning of normal security might include. Dunagan, Apr. 6, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0031.

Since one convicted of the crime of looting may or may not have taken property, looting does not necessarily constitute theft and is not a disenfranchising crime. Loftin, Sept. 6, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0386.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Evidence that defendant jumped on the hood of the victim's car and kicked the fender, causing $729.12 in damages was sufficient to support a malicious mischief conviction. Shaw v. State, 139 So. 3d 79 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Section 21-13-19, which gives a municipal court the authority to try misdemeanors and allows municipalities to incorporate all state misdemeanors as municipal violations, does not bar the State from prosecuting misdemeanors committed within municipal boundaries; the effect of § 21-13-19 is to allow more than one governmental entity to prosecute misdemeanors, as the statute simply grants municipalities the authority to make use of the legislature's classifications of misdemeanors; thus, a county circuit court had original jurisdiction over a prosecution for malicious mischief under this section, in spite of the defendant's argument that his violation constituted a municipal offense and that the case should have been heard by a municipal court. Collins v. State, 594 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 1992).

It is unnecessary for an indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2281] to specify the value of the property destroyed or the monetary amount of the damage, for in this respect it is only necessary to show destruction or injury of property and its disfiguration. Cain v. State, 253 Miss. 368, 175 So. 2d 638 (1965).

One maliciously injuring real property of another by tearing down and removing a fence therefrom is not guilty of malicious mischief. City of Greenville v. Laurent, 75 Miss. 456, 23 So. 185 (1898).

It is not necessary under this statute [Code 1942, § 2281] to aver that the acts were wilfully done, "maliciously" is enough. Funderburk v. State, 75 Miss. 20, 21 So. 658 (1897).

(1) A person commits the crime of receiving stolen property if he intentionally possesses, receives, retains or disposes of stolen property knowing that it has been stolen or having reasonable grounds to believe it has been stolen, unless the property is possessed, received, retained or disposed of with intent to restore it to the owner.

(2) The fact that the person who stole the property has not been convicted, apprehended or identified is not a defense to a charge of receiving stolen property.

(3)(a) Evidence that the person charged under this section stole the property that is the subject of the charge of receiving stolen property is not a defense to a charge under this section; however, dual charges of both stealing and receiving the same property shall not be brought against a single defendant in a single jurisdiction.

I. UNDER CURRENT LAW.

1. In general.

Jury instruction on receiving stolen property in a case relating to burglary and larceny of a church was properly denied because no reasonable juror could have found defendant guilty of this offense due to defendant's admission, a co-defendant's testimony, and the items found in defendant's home during the execution of a search warrant. Dimaio v. State, 951 So. 2d 581 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The statutory requirements for the crime of receiving stolen property are: (1) the possession, receipt, retention or disposition of personal property; (2) stolen from someone else; and (3) with knowledge or a reasonable belief that the property is stolen. Washington v. State, 726 So. 2d 209 (Ct. App. 1998).

2. Evidence.

Because defendant was found in possession of a stolen vehicle after attempting to conceal his identity from law enforcement, and he offered no explanation of how he came into possession of the vehicle, nor did he ever allege at trial that the vehicle was borrowed, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a new trial did not amount to an abuse of discretion as the verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Kelly v. State, 124 So. 3d 717 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Certificate of title and a bill of sale that were produced to the State during discovery were admissible into evidence because they were relevant under Miss. R. Evid. 401, as a reasonable juror could conclude that, because defendant produced the fraudulent documents during discovery, he knew the vehicle was stolen. In addition, to authentic the documents, the State had only to show that the documents were what the State claimed them to be, and defendant offered no objection to their authenticity. Hayden v. State, 972 So. 2d 525 (Miss. 2007).

Evidence of the unexplained possession of recently stolen goods by one charged with unlawfully receiving them is admissible in a prosecution for the offense and is a strong circumstance to be considered with all the evidence in the case on the question of guilty knowledge. Washington v. State, 726 So. 2d 209 (Ct. App. 1998).

3. Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for possession of stolen property because he knew or should have known that the vehicle was stolen as he misrepresented to law enforcement his identity during a roadblock, and he was driving with an unregistered license plate. Kelly v. State, 124 So. 3d 717 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Appellate court agreed with the State that the value of the stolen car was proven at trial where the defense introduced a purported bill of sale for the vehicle which defendant was driving; the bill of sale listed the purchase price at $1,500, which was more than the $250 needed on the charge of possession of stolen property. Hubbard v. State, 938 So. 2d 287 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 937 So. 2d 450, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 543 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant contended that the evidence showed that he stole the motorcycle and trailer and thus the evidence was insufficient to sustain his conviction of receiving stolen property under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-70; however, if the statute no longer required that there be evidence that someone else stole the property, then obviously the issue had no merit. Ezell v. State, 956 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to conclude that defendant knew or reasonably should have known that the motorcycle and trailer were stolen property because, inter alia: (1) on February 14, 2004, the owners told him that their motorcycle and trailer had been stolen; and (2) defendant had been to the owners' house and from where he was standing in their driveway could see the motorcycle and trailer, so he was familiar with them; thus, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for receipt of stolen property. Ezell v. State, 956 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Although the sole evidence of the value of the stolen motorcycle and trailer was their original purchase prices, which were, respectively, $5,600 in 2000 and $500 plus a trailer in trade, a reasonable jury could have inferred that the motorcycle and trailer had market values in excess of $500 at the times of their knowing possession by defendant; thus, the evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction of two counts of receiving stolen property valued in excess of $500. Ezell v. State, 956 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for receiving stolen property, a truck, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-70(1) as defendant bought the $35,000 truck for $12,000, was not given any paperwork, bill of sale or title, and did not purchase a tag or insurance for the truck. Long v. State, 933 So. 2d 1056 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was charged with possession of stolen property, the jury was presented with absolutely no evidence of the stolen truck's value. There was insufficient evidence to support a felony conviction for possession of stolen property pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-70(3); instead, defendant was guilty of misdemeanor possession of stolen property. Rogers v. State, 920 So. 2d 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or, alternatively, a new trial, was properly denied, as his argument that he did not "knowingly" receive the stolen property, just after the subject burglary, was controverted by the testimony of the three men who did commit the burglary, and the jury verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence given the identity of the stolen items and the testimony of said three men, who stated that the stolen items were traded to defendant for marijuana. In sum, the jury was presented with two versions of what happened, and found the State's version more credible, and accordingly, allowing the verdict to stand did not constitute an unconscionable injustice. Primas v. State, 915 So. 2d 1095 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for receiving stolen goods in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-70 was vacated because defendant could not be convicted of receiving stolen goods, where the evidence showed she was guilty of larceny of the goods in question. There was no evidence that defendant received the gun from a third person who had stolen it, rather, the evidence showed that the weapon belonged to her ex-husband, that it had been reported stolen, and that she was required to return it if she found it in her home after their divorce, but that she had not yet returned it. Young v. State, 908 So. 2d 819 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

State proved that defendant intentionally possessed, received, retained or disposed of stolen property knowing that it had been stolen where defendant's having the stolen property in his personal automobile, his selling it far below market price, and the secretive way in which he secured a buyer provided the jurors reason to find defendant had guilty knowledge sufficient to support guilt; since defendant provided no explanation of his possession of the recently stolen goods, this would lead a reasonable person to believe the property was stolen. Russell v. State, 844 So. 2d 506 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was insufficient to establish that a stolen stereo and a stolen flashlight received by the defendant had a value of more than $250 so that the evidence only supported a conviction under subsection (4), rather than subsection (3); the owner of the stolen property had testified that he paid $600 for the stereo two and a half years before the theft and $110 for the flashlight a year prior to the crime and that both items were still in good condition, but there was no testimony from anyone familiar with the market value of these items. Williams v. State, 763 So. 2d 186 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Circumstantial evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the state, supported the jury verdict finding the defendant guilty of receiving stolen property and conspiracy to receive stolen property where the state showed that a pattern existed wherein vehicle identification number plates from older vehicles were placed onto newer stolen vehicles to prevent recovery by the lawful owner. Washington v. State, 726 So. 2d 209 (Ct. App. 1998).

4. Instructions.

Because defendant was in possession of the stolen vehicle and an eyewitness testified that defendant had possessed the vehicle for at least three to four months prior to his arrest, there was direct evidence of the crime of possession of stolen property presented, and the trial court properly refused to give a two-theory jury instruction. Kelly v. State, 124 So. 3d 717 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Trial judge did not err in denying defendant's request for lesser offense instructions on accessory after the fact and/or receiving stolen goods, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 97-17-70 and 97-1-5, as these lesser offenses were separate and distinct from those charged, and there was no evidentiary basis to support the requisite knowledge element for either instruction. Brazzle v. State, 13 So. 3d 810 (Miss. 2009).

In a case involving burglary of a business, defendant was not entitled to receive an instruction on misdemeanor receipt of stolen property under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-70(4) because the only evidence of the value of stolen property was offered by an owner, and he stated it was worth $3,500. Lindsey v. State, 990 So. 2d 270 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

5. Stealing and receiving the same property.

Defendant's conviction for receiving stolen property had to be reversed because he was indicted and tried for the crimes of grand larceny and receiving stolen property and the receiving-stolen-property statute unequivocally told prosecutors not to indict a person for both stealing and receiving the same property against a single defendant in a single jurisdiction. Davis v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. App. LEXIS 99 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 25, 2014).

II. UNDER FORMER § 97-17-69.

15. In general.

"Received" within the meaning of former § 97-17-69 is not limited to physical receipt. Receipt of stolen property is continuing conduct and includes handling thereafter; the act encompasses a "continuous course of receiving." Physical possession of the property is not required nor is exclusive control or dominion. It is adequate that the prosecution prove that the property was subject to the defendant's dominion and control. Thus, a defendant could be convicted of receiving stolen property where he aided others in their handling of stolen guns and substantially facilitated their continued dominion, control and ultimately, disposition of the guns, even though he never physically handled the guns and may never have possessed or controlled the guns. Davis v. State, 586 So. 2d 817 (Miss. 1991).

Under state's evidence showing that the defendant was present, aiding, abetting and participating in the theft of a combine, he should have been charged with grand larceny, and his conviction of receiving stolen property was improper, requiring reversal. Hentz v. State, 489 So. 2d 1386 (Miss. 1986).

The statutes making the receiving of stolen goods a substantive offense are not intended to punish the thief by way of a double penalty but are directed against those who would make theft easy or profitable, and it is elementary that one who steals property cannot be convicted of receiving, concealing or aiding in concealing the property stolen. Anderson v. State, 232 So. 2d 364 (Miss. 1970), but see Knowles v. State, 341 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 1977).

Where, pursuant to an offer by the defendant to theft victim to obtain the return of his stolen property for a payment of $200, the defendant met the victim in a place where he was under the observation of a police detective, produced the stolen articles and received the $200 which the detective took from defendant's hand when he placed him under arrest for receiving stolen property, there was no violation of defendant's right of privacy or right of due process, and a search warrant was unnecessary for the stolen articles were seen in defendant's possession prior to his arrest. Bennett v. State, 211 So. 2d 520 (Miss. 1968), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 320, 89 S. Ct. 555, 21 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1969).

Where defendant was punished under a statute providing generally for punishment upon conviction of receiving stolen goods and the indictment charged receipt of stolen property alleging the value of $21, the defendant should have been sentenced under statute providing for punishment of such offense as petit larceny. Jones v. State, 215 Miss. 355, 60 So. 2d 805 (1952).

Where defendant received a ring and put it in hiding, and thereby exercised control and dominion over it, this was sufficient under the terms of this section [Code 1942, § 2249] of receiving stolen property, even though the defendant had the ring in his manual possession for a very short time. Daniel v. State, 212 Miss. 223, 54 So. 2d 272 (1951).

One who receives stolen car from thief, knowing it was stolen, and after assuring thief that if he would steal and bring him a good car defendant would receive and pay for it, is not guilty of larceny but of receiving stolen goods. Harper v. State, 207 Miss. 733, 43 So. 2d 183 (1949).

This section [Code 1942, § 2249] and Code 1942, § 2538 are inconsistent, and since the legislature has seen fit to amend the latter section, such section is controlling as the last pronouncement of the legislature. Crowell v. State, 195 Miss. 427, 15 So. 2d 508 (1943).

One convicted of receiving stolen property, consisting of an automobile tire of the value of less than $25, cannot be sentenced to a term in the state penitentiary but can only be punished as for petit larceny. Crowell v. State, 195 Miss. 427, 15 So. 2d 508 (1943).

In view of the phrase "buy or receive," either the buying or receiving of property, knowing it to be stolen, is an offense under the statute. Claxton v. State, 185 Miss. 426, 187 So. 877 (1939).

The distinction between a felony and a misdemeanor, dependent upon the value of the property involved, does not exist under the statute denouncing the offense of receiving stolen property. Claxton v. State, 185 Miss. 426, 187 So. 877 (1939).

The value of the goods is immaterial under this section [Code 1942, § 2249] so that a person receiving stolen property knowing it to be such, in the manner denounced by the statute, is guilty of a felony, regardless of the value of such property; although the punishment, in the discretion of the court, may be a sentence to the penitentiary, or by imprisonment in the county jail, or by a fine named in the statute. Claxton v. State, 185 Miss. 426, 187 So. 877 (1939).

16. Guilty knowledge.

The evidence was sufficient to present a jury issue on whether the defendant knew that property was stolen when he received it, where the defendant initially falsely denied to the arresting officer that he had received the property. Minter v. State, 583 So. 2d 973 (Miss. 1991).

The evidence was insufficient to establish that the defendant received stolen property with knowledge that it was stolen from another, where a stolen tool box and tools were recovered from the defendant's residence, the only proof relevant to the issue of guilty knowledge was testimony that the name of the farm from which the tools were stolen was located underneath the lid of the tool box and that a few of the tools left inside the box were marked with the name of one of the farm's employees, neither the tools nor the tool box were identified and introduced into evidence and therefore the jury did not have an opportunity to observe the nature of the markings, nothing in the official record suggested that the defendant could have read the markings, and there was no proof that any one or more of the tools contained in the box at the time it was recovered were a part and parcel of the tools originally stolen. Tubwell v. State, 580 So. 2d 1264 (Miss. 1991).

Defendant had been erroneously adjudicated delinquent child under Youth Court Act, for receipt of stolen property, where evidence offered by state showed only that defendant acquired possession of property from friend, and failed to prove either defendant's knowledge, or such circumstances that would constitute defendant's knowledge that property was stolen when defendant received it. In re W.B., 515 So. 2d 1175 (Miss. 1987).

Guilty knowledge is the gist of the offense of receiving stolen property. Whatley v. State, 490 So. 2d 1220 (Miss. 1986).

Defendant was entitled to a reversal of his conviction under former § 97-17-69 of knowingly possessing stolen property, where the only proof the State presented that went to guilty knowledge was the argument that a postal receipt located in a storeroom in which some the stolen merchandise was located meant that the defendant must have known that the receipt represented stolen merchandise, in that the State failed to meet its burden of proof in establishing that the defendant knew that the merchandise was stolen. Thompson v. State, 457 So. 2d 953 (Miss. 1984).

In order for the state to prove guilty knowledge, as required by this section in a prosecution for receiving stolen property, it must be established that defendant received the property under circumstances that would lead a reasonable person to believe it to be stolen. Ellett v. State, 364 So. 2d 669 (Miss. 1978).

In order to be convicted for receiving stolen property it is not necessary that the accused personally witnessed the theft of the property in question, and if a person has knowledge from facts and circumstances which should convince a reasonable person that property has been stolen, in such situation the rule is that in a legal sense he knew the property was stolen. Brown v. State, 281 So. 2d 924 (Miss. 1973).

A judgment of conviction for receiving stolen property would be reversed where the testimony in the light most favorable to the state proved that the defendant had in his possession property that was recently stolen, but there was no evidence that he received it knowing it to have been stolen, for guilty knowledge is the gist of the offense of receiving stolen goods, and such knowledge must be both alleged and proved. Johnson v. State, 247 So. 2d 697 (Miss. 1971).

Where the transaction between one charged with receiving stolen goods and another is such as to convince him, or should do so, that the articles were stolen, and he received them, he has knowledge to make him guilty of the offense charged. Bennett v. State, 211 So. 2d 520 (Miss. 1968), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 320, 89 S. Ct. 555, 21 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1969).

Where the defendant knew where the ring was hidden and led the officers to it and gave it to them, and from this the jury would have been justified in finding that he had it in his possession and, there being no explanation as to why he had it in his possession, the statements to the officers and actions of defendant in the matter were sufficient to make an issue for decision by the jury on the question whether the defendant had knowledge of the stolen character of the property. Daniel v. State, 212 Miss. 223, 54 So. 2d 272 (1951).

Word "knowing" means if person has information which should convince him property has been stolen. Francis v. State, 154 Miss. 176, 122 So. 372 (1929).

By knowing them to be stolen is not meant that the defendant should have witnessed the theft. If the transaction is such as to convince him that the property was stolen and he receives it, he has knowledge to make him guilty. Sartorius v. State, 24 Miss. 602 (1852); Frank v. State, 67 Miss. 125, 6 So. 842 (1889).

17. Accessories.

A man who agreed to purchase goods which others intended to steal, who supplied a tractor to be used during the theft, who was not present during the commission of the crime, but who received stolen goods, could be convicted both as an accessory before the fact and as a receiver of stolen property (ovrlg Anderson v. State (Miss) 232 So. 2d 364, to the extent that it holds that an accessory before the fact to larceny not present at the actual caption and asportation of the stolen goods may not be convicted of knowingly receiving stolen property). Knowles v. State, 341 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 1977).

Where it was shown that the defendant made arrangements for two cows to be clandestinely taken from the owner's property, the defendant was an accessory before the fact of larceny and thus was deemed and considered to be a principal and could not be convicted on a charge of receiving stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, notwithstanding that the defendant received the cows into his possession after the taking. Anderson v. State, 232 So. 2d 364 (Miss. 1970), but see Knowles v. State, 341 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 1977).

One who steals property, or who is accessory before fact to grand larceny cannot be convicted of receiving, concealing, or aiding in concealing, the property stolen. Thomas v. State, 205 Miss. 653, 39 So. 2d 272 (1949).

One who drives his car to seed house door, after midnight, and assists in loading fertilizer in car after two other persons have unlocked door, entered seed house and brought fertilizer to door, is actually present, aiding, abetting, and participating in theft of fertilizer and is a principal guilty of larceny and not of receiving stolen property. Thomas v. State, 205 Miss. 653, 39 So. 2d 272 (1949).

Verdict finding defendant guilty as “accessor to the crime” was too vague, uncertain and indefinite to support a conviction of grand larceny, where the evidence pointed strongly to another who actually took the money, since it could not be ascertained whether the jury meant, by “accessor,” that defendant was guilty as accessor before or after the larceny or that the defendant had received the money from another knowing it to have been stolen, and the defects of the verdict were not cured by statute pertaining to jeofails. McDougal v. State, 199 Miss. 39, 23 So. 2d 920 (1945).

Son was not guilty of receiving stolen property above the value of $25 for helping his father in unloading the property and subsequently, after the theft was discovered and an investigation begun, in assisting his father in carrying the property to some nearby woods, notwithstanding that the father was guilty of such offense. Reese v. State, 198 Miss. 843, 23 So. 2d 694 (1945).

18. Inference from possession of stolen goods.

In a prosecution for the offense of receiving stolen goods, it was reversible error for the state to obtain an instruction that if the evidence showed that the goods were found in the defendant's possession, and he gave no satisfactory explanation of such possession, there arose a presumption or inference of fact that the defendant received said goods knowing the same to have been lately taken, stolen and carried away. Mansfield v. State, 231 So. 2d 774 (Miss. 1970).

Where circumstances warrant the conclusion that certain specified articles were stolen by another, and they are traced to the possession of the defendant under circumstance sufficient to make him believe they were stolen, this is sufficient to uphold a conviction, for knowledge that the articles were stolen does not mean that the defendant should personally have witnessed the theft. Bennett v. State, 211 So. 2d 520 (Miss. 1968), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 320, 89 S. Ct. 555, 21 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1969).

Presumption of guilt held to arise from unexplained possession of goods recently stolen. Autman v. State, 126 Miss. 629, 89 So. 265 (1921).

19. Indictment.

Defendant's indictment for receiving or possessing athletic wear which was stolen and exceeded a value of over $500 was sufficient to inform him as to the charges he was facing such that he had a fair opportunity to prepare a defense; it was of no instance that the indictment did not list each individual cap, sweatshirt, or pair of tennis shoes since the purpose of an indictment is to inform defendant, with some measure of certainty, as to the nature of the charges brought against him. Tucker v. State, 47 So. 3d 164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by 47 So. 3d 135, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 573 (Miss. 2010).

Indictment which fairly tracked language of statute was not fatally defective in failing to allege ownership of allegedly stolen property, where defendant was convicted of receiving stolen property. Cummins v. State, 515 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 1987), overruled on other grounds, Morgan v. State, 703 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 1977).

It is unnecessary to allege any specific or unlawful intent in an indictment drawn under this section [Code 1942, § 2249] and following its wording. Chavers v. State, 215 So. 2d 880 (Miss. 1968).

Where defendant was charged with unlawfully receiving six sacks of ammonium nitrate, indictment stating the words “six sacks of ammonium nitrate,” was sufficient in designation and describing the property charged to have been stolen. Jones v. State, 215 Miss. 355, 60 So. 2d 805 (1952).

Where an amendment to an indictment charging the receipt of stolen property did not vary the description but merely supplemented it, the amendment did not constitute a new case or a new description which would prevent the accused from understanding the offense with which he was charged. Jones v. State, 215 Miss. 355, 60 So. 2d 805 (1952).

An indictment charging the receipt of stolen property, which described the property as a certain diamond ring, a better description of said diamond ring being to the grand jurors unknown, was sufficient. Daniel v. State, 212 Miss. 223, 54 So. 2d 272 (1951).

The use of the words “buy or obtain” in an indictment, and the omission of the word “taken” in connection with the allegation that the defendant knew the property to be feloniously taken, sufficiently charged the offense under the statute, the words used in the indictment being synonymous with the words used in the statute. Claxton v. State, 185 Miss. 426, 187 So. 877 (1939).

Indictment charging receiving stolen goods held sufficient without alleging unlawful intent. Renfrow v. State, 154 Miss. 523, 122 So. 750 (1929).

Indictment for receiving stolen property, which fails to describe the property with the same particularity as is required in an indictment for larceny, is bad on demurrer. Wells v. State, 90 Miss. 516, 43 So. 610 (1907).

20. Evidence.

False testimony of confessed thief, who was only witness who could establish elements of indictment which alleged that property was stolen, was of such importance that suppression of evidence with which defendant could have impeached thief's testimony denied defendant right to fair trial. Cummins v. State, 515 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 1987), overruled on other grounds, Morgan v. State, 703 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 1977).

Evidence of flight by defendant's coindictor and of alleged false statements made by coindictor to police concerning identity are inadmissible in trial of defendant on charge of receiving stolen property in absence of proof of conspiracy or concerted action. Van v. State, 477 So. 2d 1350 (Miss. 1985).

Admission of testimony in a grand larceny prosecution of a witness, who had been indicted for receiving the property involved in the theft, which was not contradicted, was not improbable, and was reasonable, was not error, even though the witness testified that he had an agreement with the state that if he told the truth the charges against him would be dropped. Hoke v. State, 232 Miss. 329, 98 So. 2d 886 (1957).

Defendant charged with receiving stolen goods cannot be convicted of that offense on evidence which shows that he is guilty of larceny of the goods received.

Thomas v. State, 205 Miss. 653, 39 So. 2d 272 (1949).

If two persons be jointly indicted and tried together for receiving stolen property, evidence of a separate receiving by one without the knowledge or consent of the other is not admissible over the objection of that other. Wheeler v. State, 76 Miss. 265, 24 So. 310 (1898).

21. —Sufficiency.

Trial court's decision to deny defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal during a receiving stolen property trial was proper because several witnesses testified that defendant attempted to cash a large amount of irregular money orders over the period of a few days; it was up to the jury to weigh this testimony with defendant's explanation of events. Massey v. State, 863 So. 2d 1019 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

The evidence was insufficient to support a conviction of receiving stolen property where the State proved that the stolen skidder was in a heavily wooded area which no one other than the defendant and the co-defendant entered during three days of police surveillance, that the defendant had some control and dominion over the skidder, and that he intended to sell parts from it, but did not show how the defendant came into possession of the skidder. The State failed to prove the defendant's “guilty knowledge” in that there was no evidence that the defendant received the stolen skidder knowing it to be stolen. Lewis v. State, 573 So. 2d 713, 29 A.L.R.5th 766 (Miss. 1990).

Defendant was entitled to directed verdict where the evidence merely established that he had had possession of a recently stolen generator, which was worth more than $100, and which had been sold or pawned by him for $20. Whatley v. State, 490 So. 2d 1220 (Miss. 1986).

In a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2249], testimony of witnesses that they stole cotton, took it to defendant's house late at night, and advised him that it was stolen, is adequately corroborated by the testimony of one from whom it was stolen that he followed tracks from his cotton house to the home of the witnesses, and that at fences pieces of cotton were on the ground. Fielder v. State, 235 Miss. 44, 108 So. 2d 590 (1959).

In a prosecution for receiving stolen property at a value of over $25.00, where the defendant did not object to testimony relative to his oral confession made to a deputy sheriff and another, on the ground that there was no corroborative evidence of the corpus delicti aside from the confession, the confession was properly admitted, and, when considered along with existing corroborative evidence, amply warranted a verdict of guilty. Allen v. State, 230 Miss. 740, 93 So. 2d 844 (1957).

Testimony of three accomplices, which was reasonable, and was not improbable, or self contradictory, or substantially impeached, was sufficient to sustain a conviction. Walker v. State, 229 Miss. 540, 91 So. 2d 548 (1956).

A conviction for receiving stolen goods, based on evidence showing defendant guilty of larceny, cannot be sustained. Manning v. State, 129 Miss. 179, 91 So. 902 (1922).

Ownership must be proven as laid in indictment. McAlpin v. State, 123 Miss. 528, 86 So. 339 (1920).

Under an indictment for receiving stolen goods, proof that the defendant himself stole them will not convict. Sartorius v. State, 24 Miss. 602 (1852); Frank v. State, 67 Miss. 125, 6 So. 842 (1889).

22. Instructions.

Although former § 97-17-69 implicitly requires felonious intent, record reflected that jury instruction was not improper where it sufficiently tracked statute and there was ample evidence of defendant's wrongful intent. Cummins v. State, 515 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 1987), overruled on other grounds, Morgan v. State, 703 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 1977).

Instruction regarding offense of receiving stolen property may not assume as true that defendant was acting in concert with alleged accomplices and that property sold by defendant was feloniously stolen. Van v. State, 477 So. 2d 1350 (Miss. 1985).

An instruction which assumes as true a material fact, the truth of which is for the determination of the jury, is erroneous. Church v. State, 288 So. 2d 855 (Miss. 1974).

In a prosecution for receiving stolen property, a requested instruction that the persons from whom it was received are subject to prosecution for grand larceny is properly refused. Fielder v. State, 235 Miss. 44, 108 So. 2d 590 (1959).

In a prosecution for receiving stolen property an instruction to the jury that unexplained flight is a circumstance from which an inference of guilt may be drawn and considered with all other facts and circumstances connected with the case was in error where the accused gave an entirely plausible and uncontradicted explanation of the reason why he had been absent from the county. Eubanks v. State, 227 Miss. 162, 85 So. 2d 805 (1956).

An instruction that, if property is shown to have been recently stolen, or if the property was of a nature which would indicate or from which to a reasonable man would indicate its being stolen, or if the property bore marks sufficient to give the defendant a knowledge of its ownership when received by him, there is a presumption that the defendant had knowledge of its being stolen, is fatally erroneous. Pettus v. State, 200 Miss. 397, 27 So. 2d 536 (1946).

Refusal of the court to instruct the jury that it must find the value of the property in a prosecution for receiving stolen property was not error, although the state in its instructions treated the matter as though the value, in order to become a felony, must exceed $25. Claxton v. State, 185 Miss. 426, 187 So. 877 (1939).

23. Miscellaneous.

A Negro convicted of feloniously receiving stolen property was not entitled to a new trial upon the ground of unproven allegations of prejudice against members of his race by the jurors, which tried him, where no objection had been made to the qualifications of the juror before the jury had been impaneled and sworn. Walker v. State, 229 Miss. 540, 91 So. 2d 548 (1956).

(2) Every scrap metal dealer or other purchaser shall keep an accurate and legible record in which he shall enter the following information for each purchase transaction:

(a) The name, address and age of the person from whom the metal property is purchased as obtained from the seller's personal identification card;

Such records shall be maintained by the scrap metal dealer or purchaser for not less than two (2) years from the date of the purchase transaction, and such records shall be made available to any law enforcement officer during usual and customary business hours.

(3) The purchaser of metal property must hold the metal property separate and identifiable from other purchases for not less than three (3) business days from the date of purchase. The purchaser shall also photographically capture the metal property in the same form, without change, in which the metal property was acquired, and maintain the photograph for a period of not less than two (2) years. The time and date shall be digitally recorded on the photograph, and the identity of the person taking the photograph shall be recorded. The purchaser shall permit any law enforcement officer to make an inspection of the metal property during the holding period, and of all photographs of the metal property. Any photograph of metal property taken and maintained pursuant to this subsection shall be admissible in any civil or criminal proceeding.

(4) During the usual and customary business hours of a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser, a law enforcement officer, after proper identification as a law enforcement officer, shall have the right to inspect all purchased metal property in the possession of the scrap metal dealer or purchaser.

(5)(a) Whenever a law enforcement officer has reasonable cause to believe that any item of metal property in the possession of a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser has been stolen, a law enforcement officer who has an affidavit from the alleged rightful owner of the property identifying the property with specificity, including any identifying markings, may issue and deliver a written hold notice to the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser. The hold notice shall specifically identify those items of metal property that are believed to have been stolen and that are subject to the hold notice. Upon receipt of the notice, the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser may not process or remove the metal property identified in the notice from the place of business of the scrap metal dealer or purchaser for fifteen (15) calendar days after receipt of the notice, unless sooner released by a law enforcement officer.

(b) No later than the expiration of the fifteen-day period, a law enforcement officer, after receiving additional substantive evidence beyond the initial affidavit, may issue and deliver a second written hold notice, which shall be an extended hold notice. The extended hold notice shall specifically identify those items of metal property that are believed to have been stolen and that are subject to the extended hold notice. Upon receipt of the extended hold notice, the scrap metal dealer or purchaser may not process or remove the items of metal property identified in the notice from the place of business of the scrap metal dealer or purchaser for fifteen (15) calendar days after receipt of the extended hold notice, unless sooner released by a law enforcement officer.

(c) At the expiration of the hold period or, if extended in accordance with this subsection, at the expiration of the extended hold period, the hold is automatically released, then the scrap metal dealer or purchaser may dispose of the metal property unless other disposition has been ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction.

(d) If the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser contests the identification or ownership of the metal property, the party other than the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser claiming ownership of any metal property in the possession of a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser, provided that a timely report of the theft of the metal property was made to the proper authorities, may bring a civil action in the circuit court of the county in which the scrap metal dealer or purchaser is located. The petition for the action shall include the means of identification of the metal property utilized by the petitioner to determine ownership of the metal property in the possession of the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser.

(e) When a lawful owner recovers stolen metal property from a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser who has complied with this section, and the person who sold the metal property to the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser is convicted of a violation of this section, or theft by receiving stolen property under Section 97-17-70, the court shall order the convicted person to make full restitution to the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser, including, without limitation, attorney's fees, court costs and other expenses.

(6) This section shall not apply to purchases of metal property from any of the following:

- (a) A law enforcement officer acting in an official capacity;
- (b) A trustee in bankruptcy, executor, administrator or receiver who has presented proof of such status to the scrap metal dealer;
- (c) Any public official acting under a court order who has presented proof of such status to the scrap metal dealer;
- (d) A sale on the execution, or by virtue of any process issued by a court, if proof thereof has been presented to the scrap metal dealer; or
- (e) A manufacturing, industrial or other commercial vendor that generates or sells regulated metal property in the ordinary course of its business.

(7) It shall be unlawful for any person to give a false statement of ownership or to give a false or altered identification or vehicle tag number and receive money or other consideration from a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser in return for metal property.

(8) A scrap metal dealer or other purchaser shall not enter into any cash transactions in payment for the purchase of metal property. Payment shall be made by check issued to the seller of the metal, made payable to the name and address of the seller and mailed to the recorded address of the seller, or by electronic funds transfer. Payment shall not be made for a period of three (3) days after the purchase transaction.

(9) If a person acquiring metal property fails to maintain the records or to hold such materials for the period of time prescribed by this section, such failure shall be prima facie evidence that the person receiving the metal property received it knowing it to be stolen in violation of Section 97-17-70.

(10) It shall be unlawful for any person to transport or cause to be transported for himself or another from any point within this state to any point outside this state any metal property, unless the person or entity first reports to the sheriff of the county from which he departs this state transporting such materials the same information that a purchaser in this state would be required to obtain and keep in a record as set forth in subsection (2) of this section. In such a case the sheriff receiving the report shall keep the information in records maintained in his office as a public record available for inspection by any person at all reasonable times. This section shall not apply to a public utility, as that term is defined in Section 77-3-3, engaged in carrying on utility operations; to a railroad, as that term is defined in Section 77-9-5; to a communications service provider, whether wireless or wire line; to a scrap metal dealer; or to a person identified in subsection (6) as being exempt from the provisions of this section.

(11) It shall be unlawful for a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser to knowingly purchase or possess a metal beer keg, or a metal syrup tank generally used by the soft drink industry, whether damaged or undamaged, or any reasonably recognizable part thereof, on any premises that the dealer uses to buy, sell, store, shred, melt, cut or otherwise alter scrap metal. However, it shall not be unlawful to purchase or possess a metal syrup tank generally used by the soft drink industry if the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser obtains a bill of sale at the time of purchase from a seller if the seller is a manufacturer of such tanks, a soft drink company or a soft drink distributor.

(12) It shall be unlawful to sell to a scrap metal dealer any bronze vase and/or marker, memorial, statue, plaque, or other bronze object used at a cemetery or other location where deceased persons are interred or memorialized, or for any such dealer to purchase those objects, unless the source of the bronze is known and notice is provided to the municipal or county law enforcement agency where the dealer is located. The notice shall identify all names, letters, dates and symbols on the bronze and a photograph of the bronze shall be attached thereto. Written permission from the cemetery and the appropriate law enforcement agency must be received before any type of bronze described in this subsection may be purchased, processed, sold or melted.

(13) It shall be unlawful for any scrap metal dealer to purchase any manhole cover and other similar types of utility access covers, including storm drain covers, or any metal property clearly identified as belonging to a political subdivision of the state or a municipality, unless that metal property is purchased from the political subdivision, the municipal utility or the manufacturer of the metal. Any purchaser who purchases metal property in bulk shall be allowed twenty-four (24) hours to determine if any metal property prohibited by this subsection is included in a bulk purchase. If such prohibited metal property is included in a bulk purchase, the purchaser shall notify law enforcement no later than twenty-four (24) hours after the purchase.

(14) It shall be unlawful for a scrap metal dealer or other purchaser to purchase metal property from a person younger than eighteen (18) years of age.

(15) Metal property may not be purchased, acquired or collected between the hours of 9:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m.

(16) Except as provided in this subsection, any person willfully or knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) per offense, unless the purchase transaction or transactions related to the violation, in addition to any costs which are, or would be, incurred in repairing or in the attempt to recover any property damaged in the theft of or removal of the metal property, are in aggregate an amount which exceeds One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) but less than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), in which case the person shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed five (5) years, fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both. Any person found guilty of stealing metal property or receiving metal property, knowing it to be stolen in violation of Section 97-17-70, shall be ordered to make full restitution to the victim, including, without limitation, restitution for property damage that resulted from the theft of the property.

(17) If the purchase transaction or transactions related to the violation, in addition to any costs which are, or would be, incurred in repairing or in the attempt to recover any property damaged in the theft of or removal of the metal property, are in aggregate an amount which exceeds Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) but less than Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), the person shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed ten (10) years, fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

(18) If the purchase transaction or transactions related to the violation, in addition to any costs which are, or would be, incurred in repairing or in the attempt to recover any property damaged in the theft of or removal of the metal property, are in aggregate an amount which exceeds Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), the person shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed twenty (20) years, fined not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

(19) This section shall not be construed to repeal other criminal laws. Whenever conduct proscribed by any provision of this section is also proscribed by any other provision of law, the provision which carries the more serious penalty shall be applied.

(20) This section shall apply to all businesses regulated under this section without regard to the location within the State of Mississippi.

(21) This section shall not be construed to prohibit municipalities and counties from enacting and implementing ordinances, rules and regulations that impose stricter requirements relating to purchase transactions.

All registrations under this section shall expire two (2) years from the date of the registration or the renewal thereof.

(b) The Secretary of State may promulgate and adopt such rules and regulations as are reasonably necessary to carry out the provisions of this section and establish such registration and renewal fees as are adequate to cover the administrative costs associated with the registration program.

(c) The Secretary of State may deny, suspend, revoke or refuse to renew any registration following notice to the applicant or registrant in accordance with the promulgated rules and an opportunity for a hearing for any failure to comply with this section, or for other good cause.

(2) A violation of this section is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) but not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) for the first offense. Any person who shall be guilty of any subsequent violations of this section requiring registration shall be guilty of a felony offense and shall be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections for a term not to exceed three (3) years, fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or both.

(3)(a) To register or renew registration, the registrant must declare, under penalty of perjury, whether such registrant has ever been convicted of a violation of Section 97-17-71 or convicted of a criminal offense of larceny, burglary or vandalism, where the offense involved metal property as defined in Section 97-17-71.

(b)(i) An applicant who has been convicted of a violation of Section 97-17-71, or who has a conviction for a criminal offense of larceny, burglary or vandalism where such offense involved metal property, shall be prohibited from registering under this section for five (5) years from the date of conviction.

(ii) Any false statement submitted to the Secretary of State for the purpose of unlawfully registering under this section shall be punished as perjury in the manner provided in Section 97-9-61, and a person so convicted shall be disqualified for life from registering as a scrap metal dealer under this section.

(5) The Secretary of State shall have the authority to:

(a) Conduct and carry out criminal background history verification of the information provided by the applicant or registrant and to require the submission of information and forms from the applicant or registrant in order to accomplish the registration duties imposed by this section;

(b) Issue a cease and desist order, with a prior hearing, against the scrap metal dealer or other purchaser alleged to be in violation of this section, directing the person or persons to cease and desist from further illegal activity;

(c)(i) Issue an order against any scrap metal dealer or other purchaser for any violation of this section, imposing an administrative penalty up to a maximum of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) for each offense. Each violation shall be considered a separate offense in a single proceeding or a series of related proceedings. Any administrative penalty, plus reimbursement for all costs and expenses incurred in the investigation of the violation and any administrative proceedings, shall be paid to the Secretary of State;

(ii) For the purpose of determining the amount or extent of a sanction, if any, to be imposed under paragraph (c) (i) of this subsection, the Secretary of State shall consider, among other factors, the frequency, persistence and willfulness of the conduct constituting a violation of this section or any rule or order hereunder; the number of persons adversely affected by the conduct; and the resources of the person committing the violation;

(d) Bring an action in chancery court to enjoin the acts or practices complained of to enforce compliance with this section or any rule promulgated or order entered hereunder. Upon a proper showing, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or writ of mandamus shall be granted and a receiver or conservator may be appointed for the defendant or the defendant's assets. In addition, upon a proper showing by the Secretary of State, the court may enter an order of rescission or restitution directed to any person who has engaged in any act constituting a violation of any provision of this section or any rule or order hereunder, or the court may impose a civil penalty up to a maximum of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) for each offense, provided that each violation shall be considered as a separate offense in a single proceeding or a series of related proceedings. The court may not require the Secretary of State to post a bond.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Malicious prosecutions.

1. In general.

Tenant without his landlord's permission could not remove from leased premises products of place and property furnished him by landlord, on which products and furnishings a landlord's lien existed. Scarborough v. Lucas, 119 Miss. 128, 80 So. 521 (1919).

In a prosecution for removing from the premises garden produce, subject to a landlord's lien, intent to defeat or impair the lien is the gravamen of the charge. Dolph v. State, 111 Miss. 668, 71 So. 911 (1916).

Evidence is admissible to prove defendant's understanding that lien applied only to corn and cotton, not to the produce removed. Dolph v. State, 111 Miss. 668, 71 So. 911 (1916).

2. Malicious prosecutions.

Where the landlord's agent in prosecuting a tenant's widow for removing agricultural products from the premises was acting without the scope of his employment, in that he was employed only to collect the balance due the landlord on the tenant's note, and if necessary to enforce the lien claimed by the landlord on agricultural products, produced by the tenant on the leased premises, and a criminal prosecution was not the appropriate means to accomplish such purpose, the landlord could not be held liable in an action for malicious prosecution. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

The fact that the affidavit on which the plaintiff was prosecuted under this section [Code 1942, § 2251] failed to charge a crime thereunder, did not relieve the maker of the affidavit from liability in an action for malicious prosecution. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

While a defective affidavit in a prosecution before a justice of the peace under this section [Code 1942, § 2251] could have been amended at the trial so as to allege facts constituting a crime hereunder, such affidavit could not be amended after the trial and acquittal, and affiant would not be permitted, as a defense to a subsequent action for malicious prosecution, to say that he would have amended it by alleging facts constituting a crime. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

Conceding that a defective affidavit hereunder could be treated in a malicious prosecution action as amended so as to charge a crime hereunder, affiant could not escape liability in an action for malicious prosecution where the person accused had no "intent to defeat or impair" the landlord's lien in view of the facts that the statutory lien for the debt in question had been discharged and such person had no knowledge of the conventional lien contained in the note given by her deceased husband to the landlord, affiant's principal, for the debt in question. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

Conceding that a defective affidavit could be treated in an action for malicious prosecution against the affiant as amended so as to charge a crime hereunder, affiant should not escape liability where the statutory lien on the cotton allegedly removed by the plaintiff had been discharged and plaintiff had no notice of the conventional lien contained in her husband's note to the landlord, affiant's principal, especially in view of the custom of her husband, without objection of the landlord, to remove cotton raised by him on the plantation, and to store it in a warehouse in a different county before paying the rent due by him, and in view of the request of the landlord that the plaintiff send him the warehouse receipt for sufficient cotton to pay the balance of her husband's debt, which he could only do by removing the property from the premises to a warehouse. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

Where the landlord's agent as defendant in an action for malicious prosecution growing out of his prosecution of the tenant's wife hereunder for removing agricultural products subject to a conventional lien contained in the tenant's note to the landlord, relied on the defense that he acted on the advice of an attorney at law, such defense was unavailing in view of the agent's failure to make full disclosure of the facts, especially that the tenant's wife had no knowledge of such conventional lien and that she was acting on the theory that since the rent for the last year was paid, there was no statutory lien on the agricultural products. State Life Ins. Co. v. Hardy, 189 Miss. 266, 195 So. 708 (1940).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Privilege against self-incrimination cannot be relinquished by contract prior to development of circumstances which would make its exercise appropriate; accordingly, where a judgment debtor by written agreement bound himself by all the provisions of an application for a surety bond, wherein he promised the surety access to all books and records, and agreed to furnish financial statements and pledged all of his assets to indemnify the surety in the event of loss, and thereby induced the surety to write a performance and payment bond in excess of $2,000,000, the judgment debtor was not estopped from claiming the privilege as a ground for refusing to furnish a financial statement, where there was some question whether he had concealed or removed from the state assets subject to a judgment lien, and the debtor's refusal to furnish the statement in compliance with a Mississippi chancery court decree justified an adjudication of civil contempt. Morgan v. Thomas, 321 F. Supp. 565 (S.D.

Miss. 1970), rev'd on other grounds, 448 F.2d 1356 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 920, 92 S. Ct. 948, 30 L. Ed. 2d 790 (1972).

In a creditor's suit seeking disclosure of certain assets, the chancellor did not commit error in holding that the judgment debtor was entitled to assert his privilege against self-incrimination, under statutes making it a crime to remove property subject to liens out of the state or out of the county without consent or with intent to defraud. Ferguson v. Johnson Implement Co., 222 So. 2d 820 (Miss. 1969).

Prosecution cannot be maintained under this section [Code 1942, § 2252] where the mortgage debt was not due when the alleged sale was made. State v. Sullivan, 80 Miss. 596, 32 So. 55 (1902).

Under Code 1880, removing or secreting the property and failing promptly to discharge the lien together constituted the offense. The sale of the property in the county without more did not make out the crime. Polk v. State, 65 Miss. 433, 4 So. 540 (1888).

§ 97-17-77. Removing personal property subject to lien out of state.

If any person shall move, or cause to be removed, to any place beyond the jurisdiction of this state, any personal property which shall at the time of such removal be under written pledge, or mortgage, or deed of trust, or conditional sales contract, or lien by judgment, or any other lien in this state, with intent to defraud the pledgee, mortgagee, trustee, cestui que trust, conditional vendor, or creditor, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisoned in the county jail not more than twelve (12) months, or both. The removal with intent to defraud of such property valued at four hundred dollars ($400.00) or more shall be a felony punishable upon conviction by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars ($500.00) nor more than five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), or by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one (1) nor more than three (3) years, or by both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

2. Indictment.

1. In general.

In a creditor's suit seeking disclosure of certain assets, the chancellor did not commit error in holding that the judgment debtor was entitled to assert his privilege against self-incrimination, under statutes making it a crime to remove property subject to liens out of the state or out of the county without consent or with intent to defraud. Ferguson v. Johnson Implement Co., 222 So. 2d 820 (Miss. 1969).

This section [Code 1942, § 2250] is not limited in its application to the person who has given the deed of trust on the property which he removes beyond the jurisdiction of the state, but is also directed against any person who shall move, or cause the same to be removed, with intent to defraud cestui que trust. State v. Michael, 201 Miss. 246, 29 So. 2d 117 (1947).

Crime of obstructing justice is not constituent part of crime of removing property subject to lien, and they are not same offense. McGraw v. State, 157 Miss. 675, 128 So. 875 (1930).

2. Indictment.

Indictment reciting that the owner of a certain automobile executed a trust deed thereon in favor of a bank to secure an indebtedness, and that thereafter, while said indebtedness was outstanding and unpaid and the deed of trust in full force and effect, defendant with full knowledge in the premises, unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly removed such automobile beyond the jurisdiction of the state, without the consent of such bank, with unlawful intent to defraud the bank, was not subject to demurrer because it was not directed against the owner of the automobile. State v. Michael, 201 Miss. 246, 29 So. 2d 117 (1947).

If any person shall box for turpentine, or cut or cause to be cut, a box or boxes in a pine tree growing on land known to belong to another, without the consent of the owner, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars for each tree so cut or boxed, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding three months, or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

An affidavit under this section [Code 1942, § 2408] must allege that the defendant knew that the land upon which the trees were growing belonged to another. Davis v. State, 80 Miss. 376, 31 So. 742 (1902).

In a prosecution under this section [Code 1942, § 2408] title to the trees or possession thereof must be shown to be in another than the defendant and such title can only be shown by evidence such as would prove title to real estate. Davis v. State, 80 Miss. 376, 31 So. 742 (1902).

Where the number of trees boxed is not alleged in the affidavit, the sentence can be imposed for boxing two trees only no matter how many the evidence may show defendant to have boxed. Davis v. State, 80 Miss. 376, 31 So. 742 (1902).

§ 97-17-81. Trees; cutting or rafting upon lands of another.

If any person shall cut or raft any cypress, pine, oak, gum, hickory, pecan, walnut, mulberry, poplar, cottonwood, sassafras, or ash trees or timber upon any lands belonging to any other person or corporation, without permission from the owner thereof, or his agent duly authorized, such person shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in the county jail not more than five months, or fined not less than ten dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

There was no substantial doubt as to which statute applied to defendant's case, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-59(2) or Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-81, because the inclusion in defendant's indictment of the phrase "wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously," and the inclusion of the value of the stolen timber, $1,226, made it apparent that defendant was charged pursuant to the felony statute; the indictment also alleged a "felonious" intent on defendant's part. Pollard v. State, 932 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

One who assumes to sell timber on another's land may be liable to the true owner for trespass by the purchaser in cutting the timber, especially where he points out the exact trees cut, even though the seller, due to a surveyor's mistake, believed himself to be the owner of the land. Hutto v. Kremer, 222 Miss. 374, 76 So. 2d 204 (1954).

Defendant whose employees cut trees on lands of another without consent of owner and without authority or direction from defendant is not criminally liable for fine and jail sentence under civil doctrine of respondeat superior, but proof must show that defendant himself willfully and knowingly cut and removed timber of another, or that he authorized his employees to do so. Smith v. State, 205 Miss. 170, 38 So. 2d 698 (1949).

In prosecution under statute punishing trespass in cutting trees on another's land without his consent, defendant was entitled to directed verdict, where state failed to show that trees, which were cut on land of another where boundary line was not clearly marked, were not cut by defendant in good faith. Draughn v. State, 178 Miss. 646, 174 So. 564 (1937).

To constitute trespass in cutting trees on another's land without his consent, cutting must be knowingly or wilfully done. Twitty v. State, 159 Miss. 593, 132 So. 746 (1931); Draughn v. State, 178 Miss. 646, 174 So. 564 (1937).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Title or possession.
3. Indictment or affidavit charging offense.
4. Particular acts as constituting offense.
5. Lesser included offense.

1. In general.

In a case where defendants were convicted of burglary of a dwelling and simple assault, the evidence at trial did not support a lesser included offense instruction of trespass because (1) had defendants succeeded in their defense that they had permission to enter the dwelling, they would not have been guilty of trespass; (2) once defendants realized they were not welcome on the property and that they would not receive permission to enter the home, they broke into and entered the home when they punched through the tape covering the hole by the front door in order to unlock the door from the inside; (3) the existence of the marks on the rear entrance where a tire iron was used to attempt entry supported the more serious offense of burglary rather than trespass; and (4) there was evidence of intent to commit an assault when defendants entered the home based on their previous threats made to the second victim, their use of force to enter the home, their use of violence inside the home, and one defendant's actions of hurling a large rock into the second victim's windshield when he tried to drive away. Arbuckle v. State, 894 So. 2d 619 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari dismissed by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 397 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant to charge of burglary of inhabited dwelling house who offers testimony presenting viable explanation of presence in house as alternative to prosecution's theory that defendant intended to commit some crime in house is entitled to have jury given instruction on lesser included offense of trespass; furthermore, if instruction on trespass offered by defendant is bad, trial judge has responsibility to modify, correct, and submit to jury proper instruction. Harper v. State, 478 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. 1985).

A prosecution for wilful trespass does not come within this section [Code 1942, § 2411] where it is not claimed that the land in question is enclosed. Johnston v. State, 232 Miss. 102, 98 So. 2d 445 (1957).

Where a prosecution charging trespass upon land originated in the district of a certain justice of the peace, a justice of the peace of another district of the same county was not without jurisdiction to try the case, since the jurisdiction of every justice of the peace is co-extensive with his county, and he is authorized to issue any process in matters within his jurisdiction, to be executed in any part of his county. Walker v. State, 192 Miss. 409, 6 So. 2d 127 (1942).

Time of commission of trespass is not an element of the offense. Card v. State, 182 Miss. 229, 181 So. 524 (1938).

In prosecution for trespass, state was not required to prove commission of offense on date alleged in affidavit, but could prove commission on any date within two years prior to indictment. Card v. State, 182 Miss. 229, 181 So. 524 (1938).

Refusal of instruction which in effect would require the state to prove commission of offense on date alleged in affidavit held not reversible. Card v. State, 182 Miss. 229, 181 So. 524 (1938).

Discharged employee arrested after refusal to leave premises had no right of action for damages. King v. Weaver Pants Corp., 157 Miss. 77, 127 So. 718 (1930).

2. Title or possession.

This section [Code 1942, § 2411] had no application, in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution on a charge of alleged criminal trespass in going to negro worker-tenants' homes on a plantation and helping them move therefrom, after having been notified by the one employed to look after the property not to do so, where it was not shown whether the land was enclosed, or if not enclosed, whether it was in a stock law district, and the tenants held such possession of the particular premises occupied by them as to entitle them to grant permission to the plaintiff to come to their homes for the purpose complained of. Brown v. Kisner, 192 Miss. 746, 6 So. 2d 611 (1942).

Cutting of fence wholly owned by defendant could not constitute "trespass." Evans v. State, 159 Miss. 870, 132 So. 455 (1931).

Business man having lawful dealings with employees of lumber company held not guilty of trespass by going to logging camp on premises leased to employees for that purpose. Lott v. State, 159 Miss. 484, 132 So. 336 (1931).

In prosecution for trespass on land after notice not to do so, when land is in possession of another, title thereto is not involved. Raiford v. State, 87 Miss. 359, 39 So. 897 (1906).

A person who pursuant to the directions of the owner of land in possession of tenants entered on the land for the purpose of driving away cattle belonging to the owner and found in a pasture used in common with the tenants is not guilty of trespassing on the land of another though the tenants objected to his entering on the land and driving away the cattle. Bowles v. State, 14 So. 261 (Miss. 1894).

Actual occupancy is necessary, it is not enough that the party once occupied and intends to return to the premises. Hester v. State, 67 Miss. 129, 6 So. 687 (1889).

Neither title to the land nor the rightfulness of possession is to be inquired into, the statute protects actual possession. Knight v. State, 64 Miss. 802, 2 So. 252 (1887); Lott v. State, 159 Miss. 484, 132 So. 336 (1931).

3. Indictment or affidavit charging offense.

Where an affidavit set forth the facts of an alleged trespass and incorrectly stated that the trespass occurred contrary to the provisions of Code 1942, § 2411, and proof at the trial showed that the trespass occurred in an uninclosed rather than an inclosed area, the motion of the district attorney to strike from the affidavit the reference to Code 1942, § 2411 was properly granted, for the amendment changed no facts with which the defendant was charged in the affidavit and could not have prejudiced him. Shields v. State, 203 So. 2d 78 (Miss. 1967).

A prosecution for wilful trespass upon the land of another does not come within this section [Code 1942, § 2411], where the affidavit charging that the defendant wilfully and unlawfully cut certain trees and timber on the land after having been notified and requested not to do so, made no claim that the land was enclosed. Johnston v. State, 232 Miss. 102, 98 So. 2d 445 (1957).

In a prosecution on a charge of trespass on land, the affidavit of the complainant, which failed to describe the land, was at most only defective and not void, and might be amended by the furnishing of an accurate description of the land. Walker v. State, 192 Miss. 409, 6 So. 2d 127 (1942).

Where the affidavit in a prosecution for trespass upon land charged that the defendant had "wilfully and maliciously" trespassed upon the real property after he had been notified not to go thereon, the defendant could have been tried either under the statute prohibiting wilful and malicious trespass, or under the statute prohibiting one to go upon the land of another after having been notified not to do so, since if the case was tried under the first mentioned statute, the allegation that the defendant had been notified not to go upon the property would be treated as surplusage, and on the other hand, if tried under the second statute, the language of the affidavit "wilfully and maliciously" would be disregarded. Walker v. State, 192 Miss. 409, 6 So. 2d 127 (1942).

Indictment for trespass which fails to allege that accused entered without consent of owner after notice, or that he remained after notice to depart, is insufficient. Rube v. State, 101 Miss. 362, 58 So. 99 (1912).

4. Particular acts as constituting offense.

Defendant could not be convicted of trespass under this section [Code 1942, § 2411], where his cow, which he had staked out on his own premises in close proximity to line fence, damaged the fence and entered upon adjoining lot of the prosecuting witness, in the absence of proof that defendant intended to wilfully damage the property of the prosecuting witness through the agency of his cow. Wilson v. State, 198 Miss. 828, 23 So. 2d 684 (1945).

Dipping vat inspectors going on premises and taking mules in supposed performance of duties held not guilty of criminal trespass. Bacot v. State, 158 Miss. 258, 130 So. 282 (1930).

5. Lesser included offense.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant a jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of trespass during his trial for business burglary because if the jury had believed defendant's testimony that he was not present when a storage locker was burglarized, it would have believed that he never entered the storage locker and had not committed trespass. Gray v. State, 931 So. 2d 627 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

(1) Any person who shall be guilty of a willful or malicious trespass upon the real or personal property of another, for which no other penalty is prescribed, shall, upon conviction, be fined not exceeding Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), or imprisoned not longer than six (6) months in the county jail, or both.

(2)(a) Any person who shall willfully trespass upon any air operations area or sterile area of an airport serving the general public shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisoned in the county jail for up to one (1) year, or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Malice or willfulness.
3. Affidavit charging offense.
4. Instructions.

1. In general.

Under the direct remand rule, the evidence was sufficient to uphold a conviction of trespass under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-

17-87 (Rev. 2006) given the testimony that defendant was either a principle or an aider and abetter of the trespass. Jefferson v. State, 977 So. 2d 431 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of trespass in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-87 as the evidence was uncontroverted that defendant did not have permission to enter the victim's shed, and the victim was able to positively identify him because she had seen him in the shed twice. Hill v. State, 929 So. 2d 338 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trespass is necessarily a component of every burglary, and where evidence was insufficient to sustain a jury verdict on the greater charge defendant was guilty of constituent offense of trespass under § 97-17-87. Anderson v. State, 290 So. 2d 628 (Miss. 1974).

Where a prosecution charging trespass upon land originated in the district of a certain justice of the peace, a justice of the peace of another district of the same county was not without jurisdiction to try the case, since the jurisdiction of every justice of the peace is co-extensive with his county, and he is authorized to issue any process in matters within his jurisdiction, to be executed in any part of his county. *Walker v. 2. Malice or willfulness.

Evidence that the trespass was wilful and intentional, and that the defendant did not act in good faith and with reasonable prudence under the belief that the line was their own, warranted his conviction of wilful trespass. Johnston v. State, 232 Miss. 102, 98 So. 2d 445 (1957).

Defendant whose employees cut trees on lands of another without consent of owner and without authority or direction from defendant is not criminally liable for fine and jail sentence under civil doctrine of respondeat superior, but proof must show that defendant himself willfully and knowingly cut and removed timber of another, or that he authorized his employees to do so. Smith v. State, 205 Miss. 170, 38 So. 2d 698 (1949).

Defendant could not be convicted of trespass under this section [Code 1942, § 2406] where his cow, which he had staked out on his own premises in close proximity to line fence, damaged the fence and entered upon adjoining lot of the prosecuting witness, in the absence of proof that defendant intended to wilfully damage the property of the prosecuting witness through the agency of his cow. Wilson v. State, 198 Miss. 828, 23 So. 2d 684 (1945).

Dipping vat inspectors going on premises and taking mules in supposed performance of duties held not guilty of criminal trespass. Bacot v. State, 158 Miss. 258, 130 So. 282 (1930).

Defendant may be convicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2406] although the trespass was the direct consequence of defendant's violation of Code 1892, § 3902 (Code 1906, § 4412), and gross negligence may supply both malice and wilfulness. Porter v. State, 83 Miss. 23, 35 So. 218 (1903).

One maliciously injuring real property by tearing down and removing a fence therefrom is guilty of malicious trespass. City of Greenville v. Laurent, 75 Miss. 456, 23 So. 185 (1898).

3. Affidavit charging offense.

Where an affidavit set forth the facts of an alleged trespass and incorrectly stated that the trespass occurred contrary to the provisions of Code 1942, § 2411, and proof at the trial showed that the trespass occurred in an uninclosed rather than an inclosed area, the motion of the district attorney to strike from the affidavit the reference to Code 1942, § 2411 was properly granted, for the amendment changed no facts with which the defendant was charged in the affidavit and could not have prejudiced him. Shields v. State, 203 So. 2d 78 (Miss. 1967).

In a prosecution on a charge of trespass on land, the affidavit of the complainant, which failed to describe the land, was at most only defective and not void, and might be amended by the furnishing of an accurate description of the land. Walker v. State, 192 Miss. 409, 6 So. 2d 127 (1942).

Conviction for wilful and malicious trespass requires allegations and proof of ownership of property trespassed on. Adams v. State, 152 Miss. 220, 119 So. 189 (1928), appeal after remand, 124 So. 440 (Miss. 1929); Johnston v. State, 232 Miss. 102, 98 So. 2d 445 (1957).

4. Instructions.

Jury instruction for the lesser-included offense of trespass was not warranted where a lack of evidence in the record failed to show that defendant was guilty of trespass where, even if defendant was legally on the property at the request of his female friend, he was still seen peeping into a window, was chased for at least 250 yards, and was caught with his zipper down and underwear exposed. Ledford v. State, 874 So. 2d 995 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 882 So. 2d 772, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 1114 (Miss. 2004).

A defendant in a burglary prosecution was entitled to an instruction on the lesser included offense of trespass where the person who lived in the house in question testified that the first time the defendant entered her house he did so without her knowledge or consent and she only discovered him as he came out of her bathroom, and that the second time he entered the house he kicked in the door after she closed the door and locked him out when she went to get some money the defendant claimed he had left inside the house, and another witness testified that the person who lived in the house voluntarily let the defendant in the first time. Robinson v. State, 589 So. 2d 116 (Miss. 1991).

There is no such thing as “simple trespass” known to the laws of this state; and where in a prosecution for wilful or malicious trespass the court instructed the jury that if they found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants unlawfully and wilfully trespassed upon certain property they should find the defendants guilty of a simple trespass, such charge was equivalent to instructing the jury to return a verdict of not guilty even though the state proved its case beyond a reasonable doubt. Howell v. State, 183 Miss. 293, 184 So. 326 (1938).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Testimony of conservation official that official observed defendant's vehicle traveling on, and ultimately exiting from, property which has been properly posted for at least 3 months, that official found evidence that deer had been dragged from property and put into truck, and that defendant's vehicle was only one which could have been in area on night in question is sufficient to support conviction for trespass. Pharr v. State, 465 So. 2d 294 (Miss. 1984).

This section [Code 1942, § 2409] does not limit right to post lands to owner of property and in any event this section would not be applicable to establish that defendant having been given permission to fence pasture land had exceeded his license by posting lands and thus became a trespasser ab initio so as to start running of statute of limitations. Anderson v. Anderson-Tully Co., 196 F.2d 684 (5th Cir. 1952).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Particular acts as constituting offense.

1. In general.

Probable cause existed to arrest the defendant for a violation of this section where he was found on a driveway behind a county jail, the driveway was owned by the county and was never dedicated as a public thoroughfare, and he was on notice that the area was off-limits because he had previously been forbidden from coming into the area. Bigham v. Huffman, — F. Supp. 2d —, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16542 (N.D. Miss. Oct. 9, 1999), affirmed without opinion by 218 F.3d 744, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 15292 (5th Cir. Miss. 2000).

An employee of a corporation had probable cause to file an affidavit charging plaintiff with trespass where the uncontradicted evidence showed that he had entered upon the corporation's lands not only on the logging trail over which there was a claim of proscriptive easement, but also along the pipeline right of way after he had been orally forbidden to do so;

thus, even though plaintiff was acquitted on the trespass charge, he could not maintain a cause of action against the corporation and its employee for malicious prosecution. Ray Geophysical Div. of Mandrel Induss., Inc. v. O'Quin, 365 So. 2d 641 (Miss. 1978).

A substantial charge of the offense is sufficient. Mitchell v. State, 240 Miss. 308, 127 So. 2d 394 (1961).

2. Particular acts as constituting offense.

Premises liability action was dismissed on summary judgment because newly discovered evidence clearly established a customer's status as a trespasser at the time of her alleged abduction from a store's parking lot where the store was authorized to ban her from the store under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-17 after a prior shoplifting incident, the customer failed to show that store breached its duty to a trespasser, and store was immune from liability pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-103(2) where the customer had committed a criminal trespass under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-97 at the time of the incident. Bates v. Wal-Mart Stores, 413 F. Supp. 2d 763 (S.D. Miss. 2006).

Plaintiff father's false arrest claim failed because there was probable cause to arrest for providing false information to police under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-35-47, as the father lied in stating that his daughter's boyfriend, who was under a no-contact order as to the daughter, had broken into the father's house, and telling the officers about the no-contact order could be construed as claiming that the boyfriend had violated the criminal trespass statute. Granger v. Slade, 361 F. Supp. 2d 588 (S.D. Miss. 2005).

(1) If any person or persons shall incite, or solicit, or urge, or encourage, or exhort, or instigate, or procure any other person or persons to go into or upon or to remain in or upon any building, or premises, or land of another whether an individual, a corporation, partnership, or association, or any part, portion or area thereof, knowing such other person or persons to have been forbidden, either orally or in writing including any sign hereinafter mentioned, to do so by any owner, or lessee, or custodian, or other authorized person, or knowing such other person or persons to have been forbidden to do so by a sign or signs posted in or upon such building, or premises, or land, or part, or portion thereof, at a place or places where it or they may be reasonably seen, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00) or by confinement in the county jail not exceeding six (6) months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Laws, 1989, ch. 469, § 10, provides as follows:

"SECTION 10. If any section, paragraph, sentence, clause, phrase or any part of this act shall be held invalid or unconstitutional, such holding shall not affect any other section, paragraph, sentence, clause, phrase or part of this act which is not in and of itself invalid or unconstitutional. Moreover, if the application of this act, or of any portion of it, to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity shall not affect the application of this act to other persons or circumstances which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application."

§ 97-17-103. Prohibition of recovery for injuries sustained during criminal trespass.

(1) As used in this section:

(a) "Perpetrator" means a person who has engaged in criminal trespass and includes a person convicted of trespass under applicable state law;

(b) "Victim" means a person who was the object of another's criminal trespass and includes a person at the scene of an emergency who gives reasonable assistance to another person who is exposed to or has suffered grave physical harm;

(c) "Course of criminal conduct" includes the acts or omissions of a victim in resisting criminal conduct;

(d) "Convicted" includes a finding of guilt, whether or not the adjudication of guilt is stayed or executed, an unwithdrawn judicial admission of guilt or guilty plea, a no contest plea, a judgment of conviction, an adjudication as a delinquent child, an admission to a juvenile delinquency petition, or a disposition as an extended jurisdiction juvenile; and

(e) "Trespass" means an offense named in Sections 97-17-1 through 97-17-97, Mississippi Code of 1972, or any attempt to commit any of these offenses. Trespass includes crimes in other states or jurisdictions which would have been within the definition set forth in this subdivision if they had been committed in this state.

(2) A perpetrator assumes the risk of loss, injury or death resulting from or arising out of a course of criminal trespass, as defined in this section, engaged in by the perpetrator or an accomplice, and the crime victim is immune from and not liable for any civil damages as a result of acts or omissions of the victim.

(3) Notwithstanding other evidence which the victim may adduce relating to the perpetrator's conviction of the crime involving the parties to the civil action, a certified copy of a guilty plea, a court judgment of guilt, a court record of conviction or an adjudication as a delinquent child is conclusive proof of the perpetrator's assumption of the risk.

(4) In a civil action that is subject to this section, the court shall award reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees and disbursements, to the prevailing party.

(5) Except to the extent needed to preserve evidence, any civil action in which the defense set forth in subsection (2) is raised shall be stayed by the court on the motion of the defendant during the pendency of any criminal action against the plaintiff based on the alleged trespass.

Sections 97-19-5 through 97-19-29 shall not be construed so as to preclude the applicability of any other provision of the criminal law of this state which presently applies or may in the future apply to any transaction which violates said sections, unless such provision is inconsistent with the terms of said sections.

§ 97-19-9. Credit cards; definitions.

The following words and phrases as used in Sections 97-19-5 through 97-19-29 shall have the following meanings ascribed to them, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context:

(a) "Cardholder" is defined as the person or organization named on the face of a credit card, as defined hereinafter, to whom or for whose benefit the credit card is issued by an issuer.

(b) "Credit card" is defined as any instrument or device, whether known as a credit card, credit plate or by any other name, issued with or without fee by an issuer for the use of the cardholder or one authorized by him in obtaining money, goods, property, services or anything else of value on credit or in consideration of an undertaking or guaranty of the issuer of the payment of a check or draft drawn by the cardholder or one authorized by him, and shall include a card issued by a financial institution to be used in operating an automatic unmanned cash dispensing machine.

(c) "Expired credit card" means a credit card which is no longer valid because the term shown on its face has elapsed.

(d) "Issuer" is defined as any business organization or financial institution, including but not limited to merchants, state and national banks, and any and all other persons, firms, corporations, trusts, and organizations, or any duly authorized agent thereof, which issues a credit card.

(e) "Receives" or "receiving" is defined as acquiring possession of or control of or accepting as security for a loan a credit card.

(f) "Revoked credit card" is defined as a credit card which is no longer valid because permission to use it has been suspended or terminated by the issuer.

(g) A credit card is "incomplete" if part of the matter other than the signature of the cardholder which an issuer requires to appear on the credit card before it can be used by a cardholder has not been stamped, embossed, imprinted or written on said card.

(h) A person "falsely makes" a credit card when he makes or draws in whole or in part a device or instrument which purports to be the credit card of a named issuer, but which is not in fact such a credit card because the issuer did not authorize the making or drawing of said card; or when one materially alters a credit card which was validly issued.

(i) A person “falsely embosses” a credit card when, without the authorization of the named issuer, he completes a credit card by adding any other matter than the signature of the cardholder which an issuer requires to appear on the credit card before it can be used by a cardholder.

1. Credit card.

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of two counts of credit card fraud after using a stolen debit card to purchase clothing from two stores because the store employees testified that defendant signed receipts in both stores, as was customary in credit-card transactions; and, regardless of the chosen label, the fraudulently used card fell within the broad definition of “credit card” in this statute. McClendon v. State, 124 So. 3d 709 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

§ 97-19-39. Obtaining signature or thing of value with intent to defraud.

(1) Every person who, with intent to cheat or defraud another, shall designedly, by color of any false token or writing, or by another false pretense, obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, or obtain from any person any money, personal property, or valuable thing, with a value of less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), upon conviction thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six (6) months, and by fine not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00).

(2) Every person, who with intent to cheat or defraud another, shall designedly, by color of any false token or writing, or by another false pretense, obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, or obtain from any person any money, personal property, or valuable thing, with a value of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or more, upon conviction thereof shall be guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment in the State Penitentiary not exceeding ten (10) years, and by a fine not exceeding Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00).

1. In general.

Defendant's motion to quash an indictment charging him with receiving money under false pretenses in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-39 was properly denied because the term "person" applied to artificial as well as natural persons and therefore encompassed limited liability companies. Cater v. State, 5 So. 3d 391 (Miss. 2009).

In the context of a fraudulent future promise to pay, a false pretense charge under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-39 does not encompass such facts. A wire fraud charge, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-83, does. McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 852 So. 2d 577, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 834 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Convictions for substantive Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) violations were supported by evidence showing defendants' involvement in enterprise, that enterprise operated cheating scheme at Mississippi casino, and that defendants facilitated cheating, one by placing marked cards on table for play and other by organizing cheating crews. United States v. Vaccaro, 115 F.3d 1211 (5th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S.

Defendant's conviction for conspiracy to violate Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) arising from alleged scheme to defraud Mississippi casino did not violate ex post facto clause to extent that underlying offenses occurred prior to Mississippi's enactment of statutes that prohibited cheating at gambling games and marking or altering of gaming equipment or devices, given absence of showing that cheating at gambling was legal in Mississippi prior to statutes' enactment. United States v. Vaccaro, 115 F.3d 1211 (5th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1047, 118 S. Ct. 689, 139 L. Ed. 2d 635 (1998).

Absent a showing of intent to defraud, the elements of the crime of false pretenses are not fully satisfied; thus, the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction on charges of false pretenses pursuant to this section, stemming from the defendant's failure to properly repair a leaking roof, where the State presented evidence only of shoddy workmanship but failed to present any evidence that the defendant acted with an intent to defraud. Allred v. State, 605 So. 2d 758 (Miss. 1992).

In order to sustain a conviction under this section, there must be a showing that the pretenses were false, that the defendant knew them to be false, and that the pretenses were the moving cause by which the money was obtained; accordingly, where the State failed to present any evidence that a company was injured or suffered any detriment as a result of the issuance of seven rebate checks, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction of receiving money by false pretenses (among conflicting authorities on other grounds noted in Tanner v. State (1989, Miss.) 556 So. 2d 681). Gordon v. State, 458 So. 2d 739 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution for false pretenses, the trial court properly refused to quash the indictment, despite defendant's contention that the indictment charged only conspiracy, a crime not excepted from the two year statute of limitations, and that the prosecution was thus barred; conspiracy is a complete offense in itself and does not merge with the underlying crime, and the fact that a conspiracy is committed along with the crime does not change the nature of the offense nor lessen exposure to punishment. Furthermore, the prosecution was not time barred even though defendant was charged with being an accessory only, which is a separate crime not excepted from the statute, since an accessory before the fact to an excepted felony is treated as a principal. Harrigill v. State, 381 So. 2d 619 (Miss. 1980), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 939, 100 S. Ct. 2159, 64 L. Ed. 2d 792 (1980).

Where an officer knew that the defendant had committed a misdemeanor and had also run up a large bill at a motel under a fictitious name, it was more likely that the defendant had committed the felony of false pretenses; Thus there was probable cause to arrest, based upon the misdemeanor charge. United States v. Atkinson, 450 F.2d 835 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 923, 92 S. Ct. 1790, 32 L. Ed. 2d 123 (1972).

A false pretense may be either express or by implication and it may consist of any act, word, symbol, doctrine, or in some instances concealment, calculated and intended to deceive. Neece v. State, 210 So. 2d 657 (Miss. 1968).

Acts or conduct, without words, may constitute a false pretense. Lee v. State, 244 Miss. 813, 146 So. 2d 736 (1962).

To show false pretense, a felonious intent to cheat and defraud must be proved. Lee v. State, 244 Miss. 813, 146 So. 2d 736 (1962).

Where defendant was convicted of obtaining buyer's money under false pretenses by selling property on which defendant had previously given a lien without informing the buyer of the lien, in violation of Code 1942, § 2151 which states that the punishment shall be the same as for obtaining goods under false pretenses, the defendant would be sentenced under this section [Code 1942, § 2149]. Jones v. State, 226 Miss. 535, 84 So. 2d 799 (1956).

In a prosecution for false pretenses it is necessary to charge that the pretenses were false, that the defendant knew them to be false, that he obtained from another certain money or other valuable things, and that the pretenses were the moving cause by which the money or things were obtained. State v. Cohran, 226 Miss. 212, 83 So. 2d 827 (1955).

A false pretense may consist in any act, word, symbol, or token calculated and intended to deceive and it may be made either expressly or by implication. Fuller v. State, 221 Miss. 247, 72 So. 2d 454 (1954).

Where defendant negotiated to named person, without any representation as to his identity, a check which was genuine and duly indorsed in blank by the payee named therein, defendant could not be convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, even though the defendant was not rightfully in possession of the check. Bruce v. State, 217 Miss. 368, 64 So. 2d 332 (1953).

Word "obtain" within statute providing penalty for obtaining money under false pretenses means acquisition of title to property or ownership thereof, and does not include mere acquisition of possession. Courtney v. State, 174 Miss. 147, 164 So. 227 (1935).

Intent to return money, or actual return, no defense. Odom v. State, 130 Miss. 643, 94 So. 233 (1922), error overruled, 132 Miss. 3, 95 So. 253 (1923).

It is not an offense to obtain money by false pretenses, unaccompanied by an intent to defraud. Pittman v. State, 101 Miss. 553, 58 So. 532 (1912).

It is not necessary that the false pretenses should have been the sole inducement for parting with the property. It is sufficient if the pretenses constituted a material part of the inducement, even though other considerations entered into it, if without the false pretenses, the goods would not have been delivered. Smith v. State, 55 Miss. 513 (1878).

The pretenses need not be such as would deceive a man of ordinary prudence. The statute was passed for the protection of the weak and unsuspecting as well as the wary and cautious. Smith v. State, 55 Miss. 513 (1878).

The state must show not only that the pretenses were false, but also that they were made with the design of obtaining the money, and that the money was paid in consequence of the pretenses. Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570 (1867).

2. Larceny distinguished.

When personal property is fraudulently obtained under such circumstances that owner intends that no title shall pass, offense is grand larceny, but when he intends that ownership or legal title shall pass offense is that of obtaining money under false pretenses. Garvin v. State, 207 Miss. 751, 43 So. 2d 209 (1949).

Obtaining and keeping of money under practice known as "pigeon-dropping," victim delivering money of his own to pretended finder of large sum to establish right to participate in division of money found, constitutes crime of grand larceny instead of obtaining money under false pretenses. Garvin v. State, 207 Miss. 751, 43 So. 2d 209 (1949).

3. Indictment, generally.

Where defendant defrauded furniture sellers by telephone, wire communications, or mail, defendant's second indictment for wire fraud did not conflict with double jeopardy rules, because wire fraud charge was a distinct offense, and required proof of different elements than the initial charge of false pretenses, which had been dismissed. McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 852 So. 2d 577, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 834 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Indictment charging three individuals with obtaining loan in name of one of them and dividing loan among themselves with intent to cheat lender by not repaying loan failed to adequately charge crime of false pretense, having alleged no factual representation regarding present for past fact. State v. Allen, 505 So. 2d 1024 (Miss. 1987).

Under an indictment charging that the defendants knowing a conditional sales contract was a false contract and not representing evidence of a valid purchase and sale transaction between the defendant and a third party, and by virtue of this said false representation and false pretence, the defendant did with intent to cheat and defraud a bank, sell the conditional sales contract to the bank, the prosecution was limited to establishing as false in fact the alleged false representation set out in the indictment which charged that the contract was false without specifying any respect in which it was false except to say that it had not represented a bona fide purchase and sales agreement, and the prosecution could not seek to develop that the equipment covered by the conditional sales contract did not exist. Westmoreland v. State, 286 So. 2d 807 (Miss. 1973).

Where the defendant obtained money and property from another in exchange for an automobile which he falsely represented he owned, the name of the owner of the vehicle was immaterial, and the indictment returned against him was not defective for failing to allege the owner's name. Young v. State, 209 So. 2d 189 (Miss. 1968).

Where an indictment charged that the defendants obtained paint by false pretenses and there was evidence that the seller delivered the paint to the buyers charging it to an account of a certain person in reliance on representations made by buyers that they were working for such persons, the evidence and indictments were not in variance. Fuller v. State, 221 Miss. 247, 72 So. 2d 454 (1954).

An indictment for false pretenses must allege that the pretenses were false, accused knew them to be false, and obtained something of value because of making such false pretenses. State v. Freeman, 103 Miss. 764, 60 So. 774 (1913).

Indictment secured by an attorney for person defrauded through testimony of his relatives is properly quashed. State v. Barnett, 98 Miss. 812, 54 So. 313 (1911).

Indictment alleging that "by means and color of which false pretense," defendant obtained the property in question of prosecutor, was not demurrable. State v. Dodenhoff, 88 Miss. 277, 40 So. 641 (1906).

4. —Name of party defrauded required.

In prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, the indictment must allege the name of party defrauded and proof must sustain the allegation. Bruce v. State, 217 Miss. 368, 64 So. 2d 332 (1953).

In an indictment for false pretenses the name of party defrauded must be given. Pippin v. State, 126 Miss. 146, 88 So. 502 (1921).

Christian and surname of individuals composing partnership alleged to be defrauded must be given or proper excuse for the omission. State v. Tatum, 96 Miss. 430, 50 So. 490 (1909).

5. —Where false pretense is a writing.

Facts extrinsic to the writing relied upon as having been a false token in writing must be stated in the indictment. Westmoreland v. State, 286 So. 2d 807 (Miss. 1973).

When the false pretense charged in an indictment is in writing, the writing need not be set out in specific words, but it is sufficient to set out the purport thereof, unless some question turns on the form or construction of the instrument or some other legal description is given in the indictments, the accuracy of which may be material for the court to determine. Prisock v. State, 244 Miss. 408, 141 So. 2d 711 (1962).

An indictment charging that by means and color of false writings, in stated words and figures, the defendant had obtained a sum of money from a partnership, was defective because of the absence of extrinsic facts in explanation of the pretense and wherein it consisted, and it was also defective because it failed to charge that the defendants knew that the writings were false. State v. Cohran, 226 Miss. 212, 83 So. 2d 827 (1955).

Writing constituting false pretense need not be set out in indictment in haec verba, unless some question turns on form of construction of instrument, or accuracy of some legal description of it is material.

State v. Tatum, 96 Miss. 430, 50 So. 490 (1909).

6. —Sufficiency.

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant pled guilty to uttering a forgery because a claim that the charge should have been for false pretenses instead was procedurally barred under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-21(1) since the issue was not raised in the plea; despite the bar, the issue was meritless because defendant admitted in the plea colloquy that she knowingly created a fictitious name for use on a bank account and presented a check drawn on that account for payment at a retail store. Tate v. State, 961 So. 2d 763 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Indictment failed to charge facts which constitute crime of false pretenses where finance company official had been paid to secure loan on basis of false information; whatever bad intent defendants evidenced, that intent did not include plan to deprive finance company of money or property; indictment did not suggest that loan was not legally binding obligation, nor did it refute clear inference that finance company obtained account receivable asset through transaction; crime of false pretenses occurs when one makes false representation of past or existing fact with intent to deceive and with result that accused obtains something of value from party deceived, and in order for one to be guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses, he must obtain property of another by false pretenses and to detriment or injury of person from who he obtained that property. State v. Rivenbark, 509 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. 1987).

An indictment sufficiently charged facts which constituted the crime of false pretense under Code 1942, § 2149, and was not defective because it also recited the words of Code 1942, § 2150 dealing with the use of a promissory note or other negotiable evidence of debt in committing the offense, but it was error to impose a sentence under the latter section which carries a harsher penalty, where the facts charged in the indictment and established in the proof did not show commission of the offense under circumstances bringing it within that statute. Westmoreland v.

State, 246 So. 2d 487 (Miss. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1038, 92 S. Ct. 702, 30 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1972), reh'g denied, 405 U.S. 948, 92 S. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1972).

The requirements of specificity with respect to an allegation of ownership in an indictment charging false pretense, demand neither a deraignment of title nor a statement in direct terms showing perfect title, where ownership of the money or property obtained reasonably appears from the whole indictment, and there is nothing in the indictment to support or suggest any other reasonable conclusion. Westmoreland v. State, 246 So. 2d 487 (Miss. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1038, 92 S. Ct. 702, 30 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1972), reh'g denied, 405 U.S. 948, 92 S. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1972).

An indictment which charged that the pretenses employed by the defendants were false and known by the defendants to be false, that money was thereby obtained from the state, and that the pretenses were the means by which the money was obtained, sufficiently stated the offense of obtaining money of state in violation of the false pretense statute, and adequately informed the defendants of the charges therein laid against them. Mississippi State Hwy. Comm'n v. Herrin, 241 So. 2d 346 (Miss. 1970).

An indictment which charged that the defendant, intending to defraud, did pretend that he was entitled to receive a certain sum of money evidenced by a customer's draft and did falsely pretend that said draft would be honored and by means of such false pretense did obtain from a named bank a sum of money was sufficient; and it was unnecessary that the indictment charge that the pretenses were the moving cause whereby money was obtained. Neece v. State, 210 So. 2d 657 (Miss. 1968).

In an indictment charging the accused with the crime of attempting to commit false pretenses or cheats by organizing a group of people who attempted to defraud insurance companies by staging a fake or false wreck with automobiles, a statement that certain named individuals involved in the scheme bought insurance contracts to indemnify themselves from loss occasioned by personal injuries received in automobile accidents, and that another person, also involved, had bought an insurance contract of indemnity for loss occasioned by acts of negligence committed by him in the operation of the automobiles, sufficiently described the insurance policies by designation and type and thereby indicated their purport within the meaning of Code 1942, § 2453. Prisock v. State, 244 Miss. 408, 141 So. 2d 711 (1962).

Language of indictment was sufficient to charge that prosecuting witness was moved to and did part with its goods by false pretenses. Odom v. State, 130 Miss. 643, 94 So. 233 (1922), error overruled, 132 Miss. 3, 95 So. 253 (1923).

Indictment alleging that accused intending to cheat and defraud R of $10.00 did wilfully, etc., pretend to R that he was duly authorized to represent a loan company and by means of said fraudulent representation procured the money from R, held bad on demurrer for failure to allege the moving cause by which the money was obtained. State v. Freeman, 103 Miss. 764, 60 So. 774 (1913).

Indictment charging accused fraudulently pretended to insurer that he was the beneficiary in a life policy by means of which he obtained from insurer a specified sum, is fatally bad for failing to charge the ownership of the money paid, and to allege that the beneficiary in the policy had not assigned it to accused. State v. Hubanks, 99 Miss. 775, 56 So. 163 (1911).

Allegations that defendant obtained from prosecutor $600 by certain false contentions sufficiently alleged value of property. State v. Tatum, 96 Miss. 430, 50 So. 490 (1909).

7. Commission of crime.

Evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction where: (1) several windows were taken from an apartment complex under construction; (2) later that day, the defendant's wife returned five windows to the retail store from which they were purchased, in exchange for $437.58; (3) in presenting the windows to the store, the defendant and his wife claimed that they were the rightful owners of the property, that they purchased the property from the store and wanted to return it for a refund; and (4) the defendant admitted his in-volumement in the transaction, and he stated that his wife actually returned the windows to the store because he did not have any identification. Anderson v. State, 738 So. 2d 253 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for false pretense arising out of defendant's securing of a second deed of trust on property owned by a third party which later became the subject of a loan from a savings and loan association, the evidence failed to establish the offense outlined in this section where defendant, although he was chairman of the board of the association's parent corporation, took no part in the loan process, never recorded the deed of trust, and received no benefits from the transactions in question, while the association gained a profit from a joint venture suggested by defendant and entered into by the association with the third party for the purpose of selling lots and sharing the proceeds. Carter v. State, 386 So. 2d 1102 (Miss. 1980).

Conviction under this section was reversed where evidence was clear that sheriff's deputy bought oil from defendants voluntarily and without relying upon their representations that it would cure his arthritis or "undress" his truck. Sturgis v. Jordan, 326 So. 2d 469 (Miss. 1976).

As bearing upon felonious intent in obtaining a deed, it is permissible to show that the grantee procured the forgery of the notary's certificate of acknowledgment. Lee v. State, 244 Miss. 813, 146 So. 2d 736 (1962).

Evidence, including the testimony of eight accomplices who testified for the state, sustained the conviction of an attorney for an attempt to commit the crime of false pretenses or cheats by organizing a group of people who attempted to defraud insurance companies by staging a fake or false wreck with automobiles, after having obtained hospitalization insurance on the participants and liability insurance on the offending vehicle. Prisock v. State, 244 Miss. 408, 141 So. 2d 711 (1962).

Where the defendants falsely represented to seller of paint that they were working for a certain person and wanted paint purchased charged to his account, the defendants by implication falsely represented that they were authorized to have the paint so charged and where after receiving the paint they deposited as a security for a loan thereby establishing an intent to defraud, this was sufficient to support conviction of both buyers for obtaining property by false pretenses. Fuller v. State, 221 Miss. 247, 72 So. 2d 454 (1954).

Though there is in force a bad check statute, and prosecutions may be lodged thereunder, the giving of a bad check may under certain circumstances constitute the offense of obtaining property under false pretenses. Blakeney v. State, 216 Miss. 211, 62 So. 2d 313 (1953).

Where purchasers of cattle at auction sales were required before obtaining the possession of cattle to pay for them in cash and where the accused after purchasing cattle issued his check and subsequently the cattle were delivered and then the check was dishonored because of insufficient funds, the accused could be prosecuted for obtaining property under false pretenses. Blakeney v. State, 216 Miss. 211, 62 So. 2d 313 (1953).

In order to establish the crime of false pretenses, the pretense must be a representation as to an existing fact or past event, and not as to something to take place in the future; and it must be a representation as to a material fact. Button v. State, 207 Miss. 582, 42 So. 2d 773 (1949).

The falsity of the representation is a part of the corpus delicti of obtaining property under false pretenses; and a conviction, based alone upon a confession as to falsity of the pretense, is insufficient without other proof of the corpus delicti. Button v. State, 207 Miss. 582, 42 So. 2d 773 (1949).

Evidence that defendant obtained money from another by promise to use it for a specific purpose and then to return it, together with portion of money found, held insufficient to warrant conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses, but evidence disclosed crime of larceny, provided money was obtained with intent to steal. Courtney v. State, 174 Miss. 147, 164 So. 227 (1935).

Where testimony of prosecuting witness failed to show any false pretenses, it was insufficient to sustain allegations of indictment. Dunbar v. State, 130 Miss. 317, 94 So. 224 (1922).

It is not sufficient to sustain conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses to prove merely that the representation was false in fact, but proof must show that statement was known to be false by the person making it, or he must state the fact in such way as to carry assurance to the party that he is dealing with that the representation is true of his knowledge, and the representation must have been the efficient cause of the money being paid to such party. King v. State, 124 Miss. 477, 86 So. 874 (1921).

This section [Code 1942, § 2149] applies where defendant represented that he owned a cow and would give it to a physician for medical services, and the services were rendered, and defendant owned no cow, since a physician's services are a "valuable thing" within the statute. State v. Ball, 114 Miss. 505, 75 So. 373 (1917).

Inducing another to sign a deed by false and fraudulent representatives does not constitute forgery at common law, nor under Code 1892, § 1093, but does constitute a crime under Code 1892, § 1086, defining false pretenses and cheats. Johnson v. State, 87 Miss. 502, 39 So. 692 (1906).

It is necessary that the money obtained, or some part thereof, should be obtained by the prisoner or for him. If obtained wholly by a third person there can be no conviction. Bracey v. State, 64 Miss. 26, 8 So. 165 (1890).

8. Burden and degree of proof.

Defendant's conviction for false pretenses was supported by sufficient evidence as the evidence showed that, while defendant claimed money from a widow was for repairing siding, the widow testified it was for cleaning gutters that were not cleaned and was ten times the agreed amount. It was up to the jury to decide if her testimony was improbable or contradictory. Cooper v. State, 68 So. 3d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 69 So. 3d 9, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 404 (Miss. 2011).

Proof of false pretenses must be beyond a reasonable doubt. Lee v. State, 244 Miss. 813, 146 So. 2d 736 (1962).

The burden is on the state to prove falsity of representation as to an existing fact beyond every reasonable doubt. Button v. State, 207 Miss. 582, 42 So. 2d 773 (1949).

Under an indictment for obtaining goods under false pretenses, it devolves on the state to prove the falsity of the pretenses, unless the facts lie peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. When the pretense is that the accused "is a minister of the Baptist church in good standing," the burden of proving its falsity is on the state. Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570 (1867).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

This section and 97-19-41 are a possible charge against an individual who writes a check with the intent to stop payment prior to the check being honored, even if the account has sufficient funds to cover the check. See also Section 97-19-55. Smith, November 8, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0784.

§ 97-19-41. Obtaining signature or thing of value with intent to defraud; penalty for using false negotiable instrument.

If the false token by which any money, personal property, or valuable thing shall be obtained, as specified in Section 97-19-39, be a promissory note, or other negotiable evidence of debt, purporting to have been issued by or under the authority of any person, banking company, or moneyed corporation not in existence, the person convicted of such cheat shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding seven years.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

An indictment sufficiently charged facts which constituted the crime of false pretense under Code 1942, § 2149, and was not defective because it also recited the words of Code 1942, § 2150 dealing with the use of a promissory note or other negotiable evidence of debt in committing the offense, but it was error to impose a sentence under the latter section which carries a harsher penalty, where the facts charged in the indictment and established in the proof did not show commission of the offense under circumstances bringing it within that statute. Westmoreland v. State, 246 So. 2d 487 (Miss. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1038, 92 S. Ct. 702, 30 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1972), reh'g denied, 405 U.S. 948, 92 S. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1972).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Sections 97-19-39 and this section are a possible charge against an individual who writes a check with the intent to stop payment prior to the check being honored, even if the account has sufficient funds to cover the check. See also Section 97-19-55. Smith, November 8, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0784.

The officers or employees of any bank or branch bank who shall receive any deposit knowing or having reason to believe that such bank or branch bank is insolvent, and the owners of any bank or branch bank who shall receive any deposit knowing that such bank or branch bank is insolvent, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and punished, upon conviction therefor, by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not more than two years, nor less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, for each offense.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. Evidence.
4. Miscellaneous.

1. In general.

Gross negligence of bank director in discharging his duties as such alone does not warrant conviction. Buckley v. State, 121 Miss. 66, 83 So. 403 (1920).

Code 1906, § 1169, as amended, repealed by State Banking Law. State v. McLean, 109 Miss. 526, 68 So. 772 (1915).

Cashier did not violate statute [Code 1942, § 2152] by keeping deposits received in separate fund so that identical money could be returned to depositor. Sively v. State, 107 Miss. 118, 65 So. 118, Am. Ann. Cas. 1917B,1075 (1914).

This section [Code 1942, § 2152] is designed to protect general public in making deposits. State v. Rawles, 103 Miss. 806, 60 So. 782 (1913).

There may be a conviction of a director, the bank having been kept open by the directors with knowledge of its status, though he did not manually receive deposit. State v. Mitchell, 96 Miss. 259, 51 So. 4, Am. Ann. Cas. 1912B,309 (1910).

Where statute makes existence of certain facts a crime, such facts must exist to constitute crime. Stewart v. State, 95 Miss. 627, 49 So. 615 (1909).

Accused must have actually known or have had good reason to believe bank was insolvent. Stewart v. State, 95 Miss. 627, 49 So. 615 (1909).

National bank officers are punishable under this section [Code 1942, § 2152] since congress has not made the precise conduct denounced by this section [Code 1942, § 2152] a crime. State v. Bardwell, 72 Miss. 535, 18 So. 377 (1895).

2. Indictment.

For form of indictment, see State v. Bridgforth, 112 Miss. 221, 72 So. 922 (1916).

Indictment must allege accused officers knew bank to be insolvent. State v. McLean, 109 Miss. 526, 68 So. 772 (1915).

Indictment charging defendant was president of bank and received $75.00 deposit knowing it insolvent, sufficient. State v. Taylor, 106 Miss. 850, 64 So. 740 (1914).

Words "Seventy-Five dollars" denotes money and not other property. State v. Taylor, 106 Miss. 850, 64 So. 740 (1914).

Indictment not bad for failure to state kind and character of money deposited. State v. Taylor, 106 Miss. 850, 64 So. 740 (1914).

Indictment held demurrable where it did not show how any pecuniary obligation was to be affected. State v. Starling, 90 Miss. 252, 42 So. 203 (1906).

Indictment held demurrable for joinder of separate offenses in single count. State v. Walker, 88 Miss. 592, 41 So. 8 (1906).

It is essential under this section [Code 1942, § 2152] to charge that the bank was insolvent. State v. Bardwell, 72 Miss. 535, 18 So. 377 (1895).

3. Evidence.

In prosecution of banker for receiving money on deposit knowing bank was insolvent, state's evidence that assets consisting of deposit certificates issued under deposit guaranty law were worth much less than face value held improperly excluded, notwithstanding statute authorizing issuance of bonds to pay outstanding certificates, where such bonds had not been sold. State v. Johnson, 166 Miss. 591, 148 So. 389 (1933).

4. Miscellaneous.

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2152] no conviction could be had for violations committed between the first and second decisions of the court where the court first held the statute did not apply to a particular state of facts; to convict of an offense committed after a decision of the courts holding a criminal statute not applicable to the facts and before its reversal would be to violate the constitutional provision against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment, and the statute as a legislative enactment. State v. Longino, 109 Miss. 125, 67 So. 902, Am. Ann. Cas. 1916E,371 (1915).

Under the law as it formerly existed, a violation of the statute in receiving a deposit by a banker does not necessarily make him liable to attachment for having "fraudulently contracted the debt;" but such guilt may be considered in determining that issue. The court stating that the statute was intended for the protection of the public, and it has no regard to the intent or purpose of the person receiving the deposit. Hughes v. Lake, 63 Miss. 552 (1886).

§ 97-19-51. Selling property previously sold or encumbered.

If any person shall sell, barter, or exchange or mortgage, or give deed of trust on, any property, real or personal, which he had before sold, bartered, or exchanged, or obligated himself to sell, barter, or exchange, or which he had mortgaged, or in any manner encumbered, or on which he knows there is a lien of any kind by contract or by law, without informing the person to whom he so sells, barter, exchanges, or bargains, or mortgages or gives deed of trust on it, of the exact state of the property as affected by said acts or of the lien or incumbrance thereon, he shall be guilty of obtaining under false pretenses whatever he received from the person dealing with him, and shall, on conviction, be punished therefor, as for obtaining goods under false pretenses.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Bulk transfers.
3. Indictment.
4. Jurisdiction over offense.
5. Punishment.

1. In general.

Where accused was convicted of the crime of selling three bales of cotton on which there was a lien, without informing the purchaser of the exact status of the cotton as affected by the lien, and where in the past years the accused sold such cotton and brought money to the lienor and also had sold other cotton subject to such liens and deposited proceeds to lienor's account, lien on the bales had been waived and the conviction would be reversed. Dickerson v. State, 224 Miss. 305, 80 So. 2d 74 (1955).

One of the material elements of obtaining money under false pretenses is knowledge on the part of the seller. Breland v. State, 222 Miss. 792, 77 So. 2d 300 (1955).

A material element of the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses is that the false representation must have been relied on by the party defrauded. Breland v. State, 222 Miss. 792, 77 So. 2d 300 (1955).

Where a purchaser employed an attorney because he did not rely upon the vendor's statement that there was nothing against the land except for indebtedness owed to the bank and the attorney had not discovered the existence of a federal tax lien, the vendor could not have been convicted of having obtained money under false pretenses because the purchaser did not rely upon the representation. Breland v. State, 222 Miss. 792, 77 So. 2d 300 (1955).

In a prosecution charging false pretenses in that the defendant mortgaged a parcel of land to the prosecuting witness after he had already conveyed most of his interest therein to another, the indictment charging that defendant in consideration thereof received a sum of money was not supported by proof of the receipt of property other than money, and consequently a conviction thereof constituted reversible error. Hales v. State, 186 Miss. 413, 191 So. 273 (1939).

Gist of offense of obtaining money or property through false pretenses based on failure to notify purchaser of lien or incumbrance held intent of seller to cheat and defraud purchaser. Simmons v. State, 160 Miss. 582, 135 So. 196 (1931).

Where purchaser of automobile had good title against mortgagee, and therefore was not defrauded, mortgagor or seller was not guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses. Simmons v. State, 160 Miss. 582, 135 So. 196 (1931).

Vendor not informing purchaser of lien not guilty where purchaser knew of it. Overall v. State, 128 Miss. 59, 90 So. 484 (1922).

Sale of property under a lien coupled with a failure to disclose the fact to the seller, constitutes the statutory crime. State v. Mitchell, 109 Miss. 91, 67 So. 853 (1915).

This section [Code 1942, § 2151] does not apply to a case where mortgaged personal property is exchanged for other property and money does not pass. State v. Austin, 23 So. 34 (Miss. 1898).

2. Bulk transfers.

Since the Bulk Sales Law [Code 1942, § 274], voiding sale of entire stock of merchandise in gross as to creditors not furnished with required information does not expressly or by implication declare its violation to be a crime, nor purport to impose a criminal penalty therefore, the court in determining whether a party could be indicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2151] must construe the statutes strictly. Fox v. State, 207 Miss. 538, 42 So. 2d 740 (1949).

Seller could not be indicted under this section for violation of Bulk Sales Act (Code 1942, § 274), making sale of entire stock of merchandise in gross void for failure to give notice to creditors, in absence of any proof that any of the property was impressed at the time of the sale with a purchase money lien for the unpaid purchase price thereof. Fox v. State, 207 Miss. 538, 42 So. 2d 740 (1949).

3. Indictment.

An indictment charging that the accused sold a bale of cotton on which he had given a deed of trust and a lien and without informing the purchaser of the cotton of the existence of the lien, was full and complete and did not charge more than one offense in a single count. Jones v. State, 226 Miss. 535, 84 So. 2d 799 (1956).

Under this statute [Code 1942, § 2151], the indictment must describe the property obtained or received with the same reasonable certainty as is required in prosecutions for larceny, and the proof must correspond to the allegations, in order that the accused may be informed of the charge against him so that he may prepare to defend against such charge, and that he may not be subject to a second prosecution for the same offense. Hales v. State, 186 Miss. 413, 191 So. 273 (1939).

What constitutes property under this section [Code 1942, § 2151] is a very material element of the indictment. State v. Collins, 186 Miss. 448, 191 So. 126 (1939).

An indictment charging the defendant with obtaining money by false pretenses, by mortgaging previously mortgaged property and describing the property as it was described in the deed of trust given by the defendant as being "his entire interest in any and all crops of cotton, corn, and all other agricultural products raised by him, and any hand he may employ during the year 1935 and raised on land belonging to himself or any other land he may cultivate during said year, together with any and all cotton or corn that may be due the said defendant as rent for said year 1935," insufficiently describes the property to sustain a conviction thereunder, even in view of Code 1930, § 2130, which provides for the mortgaging of after-acquired property, since such statutory provision is limited to chattels of the character described or limited as to localities or at the time of the execution of the instrument. State v. Collins, 186 Miss. 448, 191 So. 126 (1939).

Indictment charging defendant unlawfully and feloniously sold property on which there was a valid lien, without informing the purchaser of its existence, defendant then and there well knowing the existence of the lien, and that defendant did in that manner obtain $15,000.00 from the purchaser, held sufficient. State v. Fetterman, 115 Miss. 828, 76 So. 673 (1917).

4. Jurisdiction over offense.

Where acts material and essential to a crime are committed partly in one county and partly in another, the first of the counties which prosecutes has jurisdiction. Murray v. State, 98 Miss. 594, 54 So. 72 (1911).

5. Punishment.

A defendant convicted of obtaining a buyer's money under false pretenses by selling property on which defendant had previously given a lien without informing the buyer of the lien, would be sentenced under Code 1942, § 2149 which prescribes three years' imprisonment as maximum. Jones v. State, 226 Miss. 535, 84 So. 2d 799 (1956).

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person with fraudulent intent:

(a) To make, draw, issue, utter or deliver any check, draft or order to obtain money, delivery of other valuable property, services, the use of property or credit extended by any licensed gaming establishment drawn on any real or fictitious bank, corporation, firm or person, knowing at the time of making, drawing, issuing, uttering or delivering said check, draft or order that the maker or drawer has not sufficient funds in or on deposit with such bank, corporation, firm or person for the payment of such check, draft or order in full, and all other checks, drafts or orders upon such funds then outstanding;

I. UNDER PRESENT LAW.

1. In general.

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's petition for post-conviction relief where the inmate admitted that he passed a bad check in an amount that exceeded $100, and therefore committed a felony in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-55. Dobbs v. State, 932 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

An agreement that a check would be cashed on a future date at most obligated the payor that there would be sufficient funds on deposit on that date, which represents a future obligation as to payment of the check not contemplated by the false pretenses statute, this section. Henderson v. State, 534 So. 2d 554 (Miss. 1988).

Evidence presented a jury issue as to whether manufacturer's parting with furniture was in exchange for check given by defendant, or in furtherance of an agreement between the parties that the manufacturer would always be one load of furniture behind in receiving payment, which was resolved by the jury's finding defendant guilty of false pretenses by delivery of a bad check. Parker v. State, 484 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. 1986).

In prosecution for false pretenses by delivery of a bad check, it was not error for the state to cross-examine a witness who had once been married to defendant and to whom defendant had been furnishing child support. Parker v. State, 484 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. 1986).

Defendant was improperly convicted of obtaining valuable services by false pretenses where defendant, who had promised to pay the prosecuting witness $300 if she would emcee a bridal show, gave the victim a bad check after the show was completed; reliance on the check must have been the efficient inducement for the services, and since the services were performed before the check came into existence, the check was given in payment of a debt, thus taking the transaction outside the scope of this section. Hindman v. State, 378 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1980).

2. Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence, including testimony from bank employee that defendant received regular monthly account statements, that defendant's account was closed due to returned checks, and that a few days after the closure defendant would have received an account closure notification, was legally sufficient to convict defendant of false pretenses under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-55. Lyles v. State, 12 So. 3d 532 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Evidence presented to the jury was legally sufficient and the guilty verdict was not against the overwhelming weight of the evidence because (1) the witness provided sufficient testimony to identify defendant as the man who passed the forged check, and recounted at trial why defendant stood out in the witness's memory and (2) the witness recalled accepting the check for over the amount in question from defendant in exchange for the groceries. Brown v. State, 829 So. 2d 93 (Miss. 2002).

3. Fraudulent Intent.

In wife's contempt action against former husband, the wife presented no evidence that the husband issued the checks for child support, which the wife did not present to the bank for months, with fraudulent intent. Therefore, there was no justification for the chancellor to award any statutory damages under Miss. Code Ann. § 11-7-12 regarding the checks that were returned for insufficient funds, and for which the husband's efforts to make good on the amounts were rebuffed by the wife. Broome v. Broome, 832 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

4. Implementation.

District court's award of attorney's fees to prevailing parties was reversed and vacated, where plaintiffs were originally prosecuted under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-55, and had signed waivers of their right to counsel under a District Attorney policy for implementing § 97-19-55 which defendants challenged successfully. Nonetheless, the district court's award of attorney's fees to plaintiffs was an abuse of discretion. Bailey v. Mississippi, 407 F.3d 684 (5th Cir. 2005).

5.-14. [Reserved for future use.]

II. Under Former § 97-19-1.

15. In general.

One indispensable element of the crime of false pretense in giving a bad check, is the receiving of value for the check at the very time it is delivered, that is the seller must part with something of value on the belief that the check is good at that particular time. Pollard v. State, 244 So. 2d 729 (Miss. 1971).

The fact that under the statute a prima facie case of false pretenses is made by proof of the fact that a person has given a check for value and at a time when he had no or insufficient funds on deposit to pay the check, did not render the statute invalid on the ground that it compelled a defendant to testify against himself. Ray v. State, 229 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1969).

The conviction of a defendant for violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2152], on an indictment which affirmatively alleged that at the time he issued the check he knew he did not have sufficient funds in the bank with which the check could be paid, must be reversed where the state's evidence showed affirmatively that, at the time the check was issued, the defendant had sufficient funds in his bank account to pay it. Edwards v. State, 217 So. 2d 14 (Miss. 1968).

In order for this section [Code 1942, § 2153] to apply it must be shown that the property was then and there delivered to the accused in exchange for his check and on the faith that the check was presently good. Kitchens v. Barlow, 250 Miss. 121, 164 So. 2d 745 (1964).

The maker of a check given in payment of debt for services rendered, which was returned marked "no acct.," could not be convicted under this section [Code 1942, § 2153], since conviction would violate § 30 of the Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Blakeney v. State, 206 Miss. 85, 39 So. 2d 767 (1949).

Affidavit which follows precisely the form set out in Code 1942, § 2154, and charges that check was issued with intent to defraud is sufficient to charge defendant with violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2153]. Moore v. State, 205 Miss. 151, 38 So. 2d 693 (1949).

Where a check was drawn by the agent of the defendant, and the evidence does not disclose that the defendant knew of the issuance of the check, but negatives his presence or participation in its execution, a conviction is not authorized, since where there is no knowledge of the act there can be no intent as to its effect. Lovelace v. State, 191 Miss. 62, 2 So. 2d 796 (1941).

16. Obtaining property under false pretense.

Where the defendant received three used cars on Thursday, and his check, which was returned for insufficient funds, was deposited the following Tuesday, the defendant having asked the dealer to hold the check until the following week, and the seller frequently allowed dealers to take a car one day and mail in a check several days later, the sale of the cars was a credit sale and not an exchange for value based on the belief that the check was good at the moment it was delivered, and the judgment of conviction of false pretense in the giving of a bad check would be reversed. Pollard v. State, 244 So. 2d 729 (Miss. 1971).

The common-law rule that one who obtained goods by means of worthless check is not guilty of cheating is changed by this section, as amended in 1948. Kitchens v. Barlow, 250 Miss. 121, 164 So. 2d 745 (1964).

Though there is in force a bad check statute, and prosecutions may be lodged thereunder, the giving of a bad check may under certain circumstances constitute the offense of obtaining property under false pretenses. Blakeney v. State, 216 Miss. 211, 62 So. 2d 313 (1953).

Where purchasers of cattle at auction sales were required before obtaining the possession of cattle to pay for them in cash and where the accused after purchasing cattle issued his check and subsequently the cattle were delivered and then the check was dishonored because of insufficient funds, the accused could be prosecuted for obtaining property under false pretenses. Blakeney v. State, 216 Miss. 211, 62 So. 2d 313 (1953).

17. Check given for pre-existing debt.

An essential element of the offense under this section [Code 1942, § 2153] is the making and delivering of the check to another person for value, and thereby obtaining from such other person money, goods, or other property of value, but this section [Code 1942, § 2153] does not cover the obtaining of goods where they have already been delivered and have passed completely out of the seller's possession. Jackson v. State, 251 Miss. 529, 170 So. 2d 438 (1965).

This section [Code 1942, § 2153] does not cover the obtaining of goods where the goods have already been delivered, have passed completely out of the possession of the seller and away from his hands and premises in a previously completed transaction or transactions, although those transactions may have been at previous hours on the same day. Kitchens v. Barlow, 250 Miss. 121, 164 So. 2d 745 (1964).

This section [Code 1942, § 2153] has no application to check given in discharge of pre-existing debt. Broadus v. State, 205 Miss. 147, 38 So. 2d 692 (1949).

This law is not to be extended by construction to include past deliveries of property for check. Broadus v. State, 205 Miss. 147, 38 So. 2d 692 (1949).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2153], there must be an exchange of goods for check at time of delivery of check, and there is no violation of law, if at time purchaser delivers check to seller, the goods for which check is given have been delivered, and have passed completely out of possession of seller and away from his hands and premises. Broadus v. State, 205 Miss. 147, 38 So. 2d 692 (1949).

18. Instructions.

Granting of instruction that state has made prima facie case of intent to defraud payee if check is presented to bank on which drawn within thirty days after delivery and there is insufficient funds in bank in maker's name to pay check is error, where all facts are in evidence and sharp issue between prosecution and defense is drawn. Moore v. State, 205 Miss. 151, 38 So. 2d 693 (1949).

Obtaining of money and issuance and delivery of check constituted one transaction and peremptory instruction in favor of defendant charged with violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2153] is properly refused when defendant obtained $20 from one refusing to make loan but agreeing to cash check and not more than five minutes elapsed between delivery of money and delivery of check, parties were together during this interval, and money was delivered upon faith that check was good. Moore v. State, 205 Miss. 151, 38 So. 2d 693 (1949).

19. Malicious prosecution.

The institution of a criminal proceeding under this section [Code 1942, § 2153], if merely for the purpose of collecting a debt, may render the prosecution malicious. Kitchens v. Barlow, 250 Miss. 121, 164 So. 2d 745 (1964).

A declaration alleging that, for the purpose of collecting a debt, an agent, while acting on behalf of the store to which the check had been given, made an affidavit charging the plaintiff with the issuance of a bad check was sufficient in an action against the store and the agent for malicious prosecution and abuse of criminal process. Kitchens v. Barlow, 250 Miss. 121, 164 So. 2d 745 (1964).

Institution of criminal proceeding under "bad check law" would render prosecution malicious, where check was issued for goods already delivered, notwithstanding such transactions were completed at previous hours of day on which check was issued. Grenada Coco Cola Co. v. Davis, 168 Miss. 826, 151 So. 743 (1934).

Malice or wantonness held established in malicious prosecution, where corporation through its acting general manager instituted criminal prosecution under "bad check law" and check was issued for goods delivered prior to issuance of check. Grenada Coco Cola Co. v. Davis, 168 Miss. 826, 151 So. 743 (1934).

Corporation's acting general manager who signed blank affidavit for prosecution under "bad check law" held charged with corporation's knowledge that goods for which check was issued had been delivered prior to issuance of check. Grenada Coco Cola Co. v. Davis, 168 Miss. 826, 151 So. 743 (1934).

Where corporation's acting general manager signed blank affidavit for prosecution under "bad check law" and sent affidavit to justice of peace who instituted prosecution, justice of peace became agent of corporation which became responsible for subsequent arrest and prosecution. Grenada Coco Cola Co. v. Davis, 168 Miss. 826, 151 So. 743 (1934).

When creditors resort to criminal processes and to arrests under criminal charges for collection of their debts, courts will not be diligent in interfering with amounts of damages fixed by juries for malicious prosecution. Grenada Coco Cola Co. v. Davis, 168 Miss. 826, 151 So. 743 (1934).

Institution of criminal proceeding under Bad Check Law, if merely for purpose of collecting debt, would render prosecution malicious. Odom v. Tally, 160 Miss. 797, 134 So. 163 (1931).

20. Decisions under earlier bad check laws.

Worthless Check Act, not requiring intent to defraud or knowledge of insufficiency of funds, and providing for dismissal of prosecution on payment of check violates constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt. State v. Johnson, 163 Miss. 521, 141 So. 338 (1932).

Statute [Code 1942, § 2153] not violated where defendant told prosecuting witness he did not have money in bank to cover check given him but promised to deposit it to protect the check. Hammack v. State, 114 Miss. 611, 75 So. 436 (1917).

21. Indictment.

Indictment must allege defendant's knowledge of insufficiency of funds to meet check. State v. Puckett, 127 Miss. 415, 90 So. 113 (1921).

Indictment for false pretenses alleging nonpayment of bank check held insufficient. State v. Puckett, 127 Miss. 415, 90 So. 113 (1921).

Intention to defraud must be alleged in indictment for obtaining money by bad check. Herron v. State, 118 Miss. 420, 79 So. 289 (1918); McBride v. State, 141 Miss. 186, 104 So. 454 (1925).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Judge is mandated to issue arrest warrant for violator if and when judge is satisfied there exists probable cause to believe that crime has been committed and defendant has committed it; issuance of bad check with intent to defraud is crime, even though it may have been passed by non-resident and even though it may be for less than $100.00. Horan, Nov. 18, 1992, A.G. Op. #92-0868.

Check to be submitted for payment at future date, and not at time of giving of check, would not support conviction under this section if check at future time proved worthless. Martin, Jan. 12, 1994, A.G. Op. #93-0834.

The Justice Court Clerk is required to accept any affidavit charging a crime which a person wishes to file with the Court, including affidavits charging allegations of the bad check statutes. See § 97-19-55 et seq. Ammons, June 28, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0284.

The participation of the District Attorney's office is not necessary for a person to be prosecuted under Sections 97-19-67 and this section. Ammons, June 28, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0284.

Under § 97-19-67, the prosecution of a person for violation of this section (bad check violation) is commenced by the filing of a complaint by the district attorney's office (pursuant to 97-19-79), the court must impose a fee up to eight-five percent of the face value of the check. However, if the prosecution of a person for bad check violation was not commenced by the filing of a complaint by the district attorney, then the court should not impose the fee. Carter, August 2, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0388.

If there is no fraudulent intent on the part of the maker or drawer of the check at the time the check was issued, then a stop payment order would not constitute a violation of this section. Smith, November 8, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0784.

If the circumstances are such that the maker or drawer of the check knew at the time the check was issued that the account had insufficient funds to cover the check, and later issued a stop payment order with intent to defraud, then a violation of Section 97-19-55 may well have occurred. Smith, November 8, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0784.

Sections 97-19-39 and 97-19-41 are a possible charge against an individual who writes a check with the intent to stop payment prior to the check being honored, even if the account has sufficient funds to cover the check. See also Section 97-19-55. Smith, November 8, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0784.

Prosecution under the forgery and counterfeiting statutes, Sections 97-21-1 et seq., should occur when a person attempts to cash a check by forging another's name, not for knowingly writing a check with insufficient funds to cover the amount. Stricklin, March 27, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0158.

Once a district attorney files a complaint and proceeds with prosecution under the statute, the defendant should be arrested on the warrant that has been issued and prosecution should continue as in any other criminal case. Mark, May 15, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0262.

A person who post-dates a check may not be prosecuted under this section if the check is later dishonored. Hudson, February 5, 1999, A.G. Op. #99-0028.

The issuer of a bad check may be charged under the statute unless the full amount of the check is paid to the receiver of the check. O'Bryant, Mar. 22, 2002, A.G. Op. #02-0101.

This section does not override Section 75-67-515(10) and allow a check casher to pursue criminal charges against the maker of insufficient fund checks. James, July 7, 2003, A.G. Op. 03-0291.

It is unlawful for any person with fraudulent intent to make or issue a check, knowing at the time of the making of the check that the maker or drawer doesn't have sufficient funds in or on deposit with the bank for the payment of the check in full, and all other checks upon such funds then outstanding. Whether or not specific actions of an individual constitute a crime is a factual determination that must be made by a court of competent jurisdiction. White, March 30, 2007, A.G. Op. #07-00165, 2007 Miss. AG LEXIS 67.

§ 97-19-57. Bad checks; presumption of fraudulent intent; notice that check has not been paid; notice returned undelivered as evidence of intent to defraud; transactions involving motor vehicles.

(1) As against the maker or drawer thereof, the making, drawing, issuing, uttering or delivering of a check, draft or order, payment of which is refused by the drawee, shall be prima facie evidence and create a presumption of intent to defraud and of knowledge of insufficient funds in, or on deposit with, such bank, corporation, firm or person, provided such maker or drawer shall not have paid the holder thereof the amount due thereon, together with a service charge of Forty Dollars ($40.00), within fifteen (15) days after receiving notice that such check, draft or order has not been paid by the drawee.

(2) For purposes of Section 11-7-12, the form of the notice provided for in subsection (1) of this section shall be sent by regular mail and shall be substantially as follows: "This statutory notice is provided pursuant to Section 97-19-57, Mississippi Code of 1972. You are hereby notified that a check, draft or order numbered _____, apparently issued by you on _____ (date), drawn upon _____ (name of bank), and payable to _____, has been dishonored. Pursuant to Mississippi law, you have fifteen (15) days from receipt of this notice to tender payment of the full amount of such check, draft or order, plus a service charge of Forty Dollars ($40.00), the total amount due being $_____. Failure to pay this amount in full within the time specified above shall be prima facie evidence of and create a presumption of both the intent to defraud and the knowledge of insufficient funds in, or on deposit with, such bank in violation of Section 97-19-55."

(3) For purposes of Section 97-19-67, the form of the notice provided for in subsection (1) of this section shall be sent by regular mail, supported by an affidavit of service by mailing, and shall be substantially as follows: "This statutory notice is provided pursuant to Section 97-19-57, Mississippi Code of 1972. You are hereby notified that a check, draft or order numbered _____, apparently issued by you on _____ (date), drawn upon _____ (name of bank), and payable to _____, has been dishonored. Pursuant to Mississippi law, you have fifteen (15) days from receipt of this notice to tender payment of the full amount of such check, draft or order, plus a service charge of Forty Dollars ($40.00), the total amount due being $_____. Unless this amount is paid in full within the time specified above, the holder may assume that you delivered the instrument with intent to defraud and may turn over the dishonored instrument and all other available information relating to this incident to the proper authorities for criminal prosecution."

(4) If any notice is returned undelivered to the sender after such notice was mailed to the address printed on the check, draft or order, or to the address given by the accused at the time of issuance of the instrument, such return shall be prima facie evidence of the maker's or drawer's intent to defraud.

(5) Affidavit of service by mail shall be adequate if made in substantially the following form:

"STATE OF _____

COUNTY OF _____

_____, being first duly sworn on oath, deposes and states that he/she is at least eighteen (18) years of age and that on (date) _____, 2_____, he/she served the attached Notice of Dishonor by placing a true and correct copy thereof securely enclosed in an envelope addressed as follows:

and deposited the same, postage prepaid, in the United States mail at _____, _____.

Subscribed to and sworn before me, this the _____ day of _____, 2_____.

(Notary Public)

My commission expires:
(SEAL) "

(6) Without in any way limiting the provisions of this section, this section shall apply to a draft for the payment of money given for a motor vehicle even if such payment is conditioned upon delivery of documents necessary for transfer of a valid title to the purchaser.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Ten Dollar ($10.00) service charge is one which maker or drawer can voluntarily pay to holder to avoid certain criminal presumptions, and does not constitute part of said debt, nor does this fee meet definition of “pecuniary damages” for which restitution may be ordered by court; however, Justice Court Judge may require convicted defendant to pay fee where it was made part of restitution agreement. Little, Feb. 21, 1990, A.G. Op. #90-0106.

This section creates evidentiary presumption upon failure of defendant to pay $30; it does not create right in form of civil penalty belonging to victim for $30; such is already provided for at Miss. Code Section 11-7-12. Horan, Apr. 14, 1993, A.G. Op. #93-0220.

The service charge which is set out in this section is one which the maker or drawer can voluntarily pay to the holder to avoid certain criminal presumptions, and does not constitute part of the said debt, nor does this fee meet the definition of “pecuniary damages” for which restitution may be ordered by a court, pursuant to Section 97-19-67(4). Cotten, April 6, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0176.

A Municipal Court Judge may require a convicted defendant to pay the holder the fee set out in this section where said fee was made part of the restitution agreement under Section 97-19-75(6). Cotten, April 6, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0176.

Giving a notice of dishonor to the drawer imposes upon or adds to the amount of the check a service charge not to exceed $30, although this service charge cannot be obtained if suit is filed pursuant to § 11-7-12. Ross, May 15, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0261.

(1) In any prosecution or action under the provisions of Section 97-19-55, a check, draft or order for which the information required in subsections (2) and (3) of this section is available at the time of issuance, utterance or delivery shall constitute prima facie evidence of the identity of the party issuing, uttering or delivering the check, draft or order and that such person was a party authorized to draw upon the named account.

(2) To establish prima facie evidence of the identity of the party presenting such check, draft or order, the following information regarding such identity shall be requested by the party receiving such instrument: The presenter's name, residence address and home phone number. Such information may be provided in the following manner:

(a) The information may be recorded upon the check, draft or order itself; or

(b) The number of a check-cashing identification card issued by the receiving party may be recorded on the check, draft or order. Such check-cashing identification card shall be issued only after the information required in this subsection has been placed on file by the receiving party.

(3) In addition to the information required in subsection (2) of this section, the party receiving the check, draft or order shall witness the signature or endorsement of the party presenting such instrument and, as evidence of such, the receiving party shall initial the instrument.

In all prosecutions under Sections 97-19-55 through 97-19-69, the introduction in evidence of any unpaid and dishonored check, draft or other order for the payment of money, having the drawee's refusal to pay stamped or written thereon or attached thereto, with the reason therefor as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence of the making or uttering of said check, draft or other order for the payment of money and the dishonor thereof, and that the same was properly dishonored for the reasons written, stamped or attached by the drawee on such dishonored check, draft or other such order for the payment of money.

§ 97-19-67. Bad checks; penalties; restitution.

(1) Except as may be otherwise provided by subsection (2) of this section, any person violating Section 97-19-55, upon conviction, shall be punished as follows:

(a) For the first offense of violating said section, where the check, draft or order involved be less than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00), the person committing such offense shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00), nor more than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not less than five (5) days nor more than six (6) months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court;

(b) Upon commission of a second offense of violating said section, where the check, draft or order involved is less than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00), the person committing such offense shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than Fifty Dollars ($50.00) nor more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not less than thirty (30) days nor more than one (1) year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court;

(c) Upon commission of a third or any subsequent offense of violating said section, regardless of the amount of the check, draft or order involved, and regardless of the amount of the checks, drafts or orders involved in the prior convictions, the person committing such offense shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment in the State Penitentiary for a term of not less than one (1) nor more than five (5) years.

(d) Where the check, draft or order involved shall be One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) or more, the person committing such offense, whether same be a first or second offense, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) nor more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by imprisonment in the State Penitentiary for a term of not more than three (3) years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Upon conviction of a third or any subsequent offense, the person convicted shall be punished as is provided in the immediately preceding paragraph hereof.

(2) Where the conviction was based on a worthless check, draft or order given for the purpose of satisfying a pre-existing debt or making a payment or payments on a past-due account or accounts, no imprisonment shall be ordered as punishment, but the court may order the convicted person to pay a fine of up to the applicable amounts prescribed in paragraphs (1)(a)(b) and (d) of this section.

(3) In addition to or in lieu of any penalty imposed under the provisions of subsection (1) or subsection (2) of this section, the court may, in its discretion, order any person convicted of violating Section 97-19-55 to make restitution in accordance with the provisions of Sections 99-37-1 through 99-37-23 to the holder of any check, draft or order for which payment has been refused.

(4) Upon conviction of any person for a violation of Section 97-19-55, when the prosecution of such person was commenced by the filing of a complaint with the court by the district attorney under the provisions of Section 97-19-79, the court shall, in addition to any other fine, fee, cost or penalty which may be imposed under this section or as otherwise provided by law, and in addition to any order as the court may enter under subsection (3) of this section requiring the offender to pay restitution under Sections 99-37-1 through 99-37-23, impose a fee in the amount up to eighty-five percent (85%) of the face amount of the check, draft or order for which the offender was convicted of drawing, making, issuing, uttering or delivering in violation of Section 97-19-55.

(5) It shall be the duty of the clerk or judicial officer of the court collecting the fees imposed under subsection (4) of this section to monthly deposit all such fees so collected with the State Treasurer, either directly or by other appropriate procedures, for deposit in the special fund of the State Treasury created under Section 99-19-32, known as the "Criminal Justice Fund."

(6) After the accused has complied with all terms of the statute and the complainant or victim has been paid, the district attorney's check unit may dispose of the accused's file after one (1) year has expired after the last audit.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Felonies.

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's petition for post-conviction relief where the inmate admitted that he passed a bad check in an amount that exceeded $100, and therefore committed a felony in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-55. Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-67 provided that a person found guilty of committing the offense may be fined between $ 100 and $ 1,000, may be imprisoned up to three years, or may face both a fine and prison sentence. Dobbs v. State, 932 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

A standard practice of extracting a set fine from persons accused of writing bad checks on the pain of suffering a full criminal prosecution for failure to do so violates equal protection. Moody v. State, 716 So. 2d 562 (Miss. 1998).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Fine in bad check case could be suspended as in any other case, and offender could be sentenced to period of probation, violation of which would result in reinstitution of fine. Clark, July 3, 1991, A.G. Op. #91-0456.

Under subsection (1)(d) of this section, any bad check of $100 or more is classified as felony, despite some confusion created by passage of law increasing amount for grand larceny from $100 to $250. Huckaby, Feb. 25, 1993, A.G. Op. #92-0975.

The participation of the District Attorney's office is not necessary for a person to be prosecuted under this section and Section 97-19-55. Ammons, June 28, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0284.

Under this section, the prosecution of a person for violation of Section 97-19-55 (bad check violation) is commenced by the filing of a complaint by the district attorney's office (pursuant to 97-19-79), the court must impose a fee up to eight-five percent of the face value of the check. However, if the prosecution of a person for bad check violation was not commenced by the filing of a complaint by the district attorney, then the court should not impose the fee. Carter, August 2, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0388.

Subsection (4) of this section does not allow the court to suspend the fee set forth in section. Carter, August 2, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0388.

A cause of action for malicious prosecution was not stated in a declaration which did not allege that the defendant justice of the peace had any knowledge of the truth or falsity of the affidavit charging plaintiff with violation of Code 1942, § 2153 at the time of issuance of the warrant, did not allege that the justice of the peace had any financial interest in the money obtained by plaintiff when he issued the warrant, did not allege that the justice of the peace, at the time of issuing the warrant, had personal knowledge that the prosecution was being instituted for the collection of a civil debt, and did not allege that the justice of the peace did not have territorial jurisdiction of the offense charged in the affidavit. *Kitchens v. (3) Any person who knowingly:

(a) Exchanges food purchased or obtained with; or

(b) Attempts to exchange food purchased or obtained with benefits or an electronic benefits transfer card under the federal Food and Nutrition Program for cash or anything of value other than food, is guilty of fraud.

(5) Any person who:

(a) Knowingly files, attempts to file, or aids and abets in the filing of, a claim for services to a recipient of benefits under any state or federally funded assistance program for services which were not rendered; knowingly files a false claim for nonauthorized items or services under such a program; or knowingly bills the recipient of benefits under such a program, or his family, for an amount in excess of that provided for by law or regulations; or

(b) In any way knowingly receives, attempts to receive, or aids and abets in the receipt of unauthorized payment as provided herein is guilty of fraud.

(6) Any person who knowingly signs, or aids and abets any person to sign, a false application for the replacement of benefits or aid to which that person is entitled claiming that person's benefits or aid was not received, is guilty of fraud.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Since the principal offenses of welfare fraud as defined in this section include attempts, an indictment for a principal welfare fraud offense is in no way defective because it employs the word "attempt," and the state is not limited at trial to proof only of the attempt. McCullum v. State, 487 So. 2d 1335 (Miss. 1986).

A defendant convicted of welfare fraud could be sentenced as a recidivist since her 2 earlier convictions for forgery of 2 separate checks on 2 separate dates constituted separate incidents at different times, notwithstanding that the checks had been purloined from the same person and the same name had been forged on each check. McCullum v. State, 487 So. 2d 1335 (Miss. 1986).

Indictment charging that defendant knowingly attempted to receive an unauthorized payment of food stamps by knowingly submitting a false affidavit regarding ATP card lost or stolen, to which the specific affidavit on which the indictment was based was attached, fairly and adequately charged an offense under this section, and fairly notified defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation against her. McCullum v. State, 487 So. 2d 1335 (Miss. 1986).

Proof of delivery of check made payable to 2 parties and indorsed by each of those parties, without more, is insufficient, in context of criminal prosecution for food stamp fraud, to establish that one of parties received given portion of face amount of check; accordingly, such facts are not sufficient to undergird conviction predicated thereon. Edwards v. State, 469 So. 2d 68 (Miss. 1985).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

A District Attorney may contract with a private individual or an agency for the collection of bad checks pursuant to Sections 97-19-73 through 97-19-79. However, the State Auditor's Office should be contacted concerning the proper manner in which such an individual or agency should be paid. Fortenberry, February 14, 1996, A.G. Op. #96-0020.

An individual who receives a bad check may file a complaint with the district attorney's office, and the district attorney's office should notify the accused that a complaint has been filed; the district attorney may also request that a warrant be issued against the accused; if the accused responds to the notice, the district attorney should enter into a restitution agreement with the accused in order to collect the amount money owed to the complainant, but if the accused fails to respond to the notice or fails to comply with the restitution agreement, the district attorney should proceed with the criminal charges against the accused; it is not necessary for the district attorney to attach the original check in order to file the criminal complaint. § 97-19-75. Bad check complaint procedures; restitution procedures.

(1) The holder of any check, draft or order for the payment of money which has been made, drawn, issued, uttered or delivered in violation of Section 97-19-55, Mississippi Code of 1972, may, after complying with the provisions of Section 97-19-57, Mississippi Code of 1972, present a complaint to the district attorney. The complaint shall be accompanied by the original check, draft or order upon which the complaint is filed and the return receipt showing mailing of notice under Section 97-19-57, Mississippi Code of 1972. Not more than one (1) check, draft or order shall be included within a single complaint. Upon receipt of such complaint, the district attorney shall evaluate the complaint to determine whether or not the complaint is appropriate to be processed by the district attorney.

(2) If, after filing a complaint with the district attorney, the complainant wishes to withdraw the complaint for good cause, the complainant shall pay a fee of Thirty Dollars ($30.00) to the office of the district attorney for processing such complaint. Upon payment of the processing fee and withdrawal of the complaint, the district attorney shall return the original check, draft or order to the complainant.

(3) After approval of the complaint by the district attorney, a warrant may be issued by any judicial officer authorized by law to issue arrest warrants, and the warrant may be held by the district attorney. After issuance of a warrant or upon approval of a complaint by the district attorney, the district attorney shall issue a notice to the individual charged in the complaint, informing him that a warrant has been issued for his arrest or that a complaint has been received by the district attorney and that he may be eligible for deferred prosecution for a violation of Section 97-19-55, Mississippi Code of 1972, by voluntarily surrendering himself to the district attorney within ten (10) days, Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, from receipt of the notice. Such notice shall be sent by United States mail.

(4)(a) If the check is not a casino marker, and the accused voluntarily surrenders himself within the time period as provided by subsection (3) of this section, the accused shall be presented with the complaint and/or warrant and prosecution of the accused may be deferred upon payment by the accused of a service charge in the amount of Forty Dollars ($40.00) to the district attorney and by execution of a restitution agreement as hereinafter provided.

(b) If the check is a casino marker, and the accused voluntarily surrenders himself within the time period as provided by subsection (3) of this section, the accused shall be presented with the complaint and/or warrant, and prosecution of the accused may be deferred upon payment by the accused of a service charge in the amounts specified in this paragraph (b) to the district attorney and by execution of a restitution agreement as hereinafter provided. The amounts of the service charge are as follows:

(i) Forty Dollars ($40.00), if the amount of the check or draft is equal to or less than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00).

(ii) Fifty Dollars ($50.00), if the face amount of the check or draft is more than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) but does not exceed Three Hundred Dollars ($300.00).

(iii) Seventy-five Dollars ($75.00), if the face amount of the check or draft is more than Three Hundred Dollars ($300.00) but does not exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00).

(iv) One Hundred Fifty Dollars ($150.00), if the face amount of the check or draft is more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) but does not exceed Two Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($2,500.00).

(v) Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), if the face amount of the check or draft is more than Two Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($2,500.00) but does not exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00).

(vi) Ten percent (10%) of the face amount of the check or draft, if the face amount of the check or draft is more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00).

(5) For the purposes of Sections 97-19-73 through 97-19-81, the term "restitution" shall mean and be defined as the face amount of any check, draft or order for the payment of money made, drawn, issued, uttered or delivered in violation of Section 97-19-55, Mississippi Code of 1972, plus a service charge payable to the complainant in the amount of Thirty Dollars ($30.00).

(6) After an accused has voluntarily surrendered himself and paid the service charge as provided by subsection (4) of this section, the district attorney may enter into a restitution agreement with the accused prescribing the terms by which the accused shall satisfy restitution to the district attorney on behalf of the complainant. The terms of such agreement shall be determined on a case-by-case basis by the district attorney, but the duration of any such agreement shall be no longer than a period of six (6) months. No interest shall be charged or collected on restitution monies. The restitution agreement shall be signed by the accused and approved by the district attorney before it is effective. If the accused does not honor each term of the restitution agreement signed by him, the accused may be proceeded against by prosecution under the provisions of Sections 97-19-55 through 97-19-69, Mississippi Code of 1972, and as provided by Section 97-19-79. If the accused makes restitution and pays all charges set out by statute or if the accused enters into a restitution agreement as set out above and honors all terms of such agreement, then if requested, the original check may be returned to the accused and a photocopy retained in the check file.

(7) If the holder of any check, draft or order for the payment of money presents to the district attorney satisfactory evidence that the original check, draft or order is unavailable and satisfactory evidence of the check, draft or order is presented in the form of bank records or a photographic copy of the instrument, whether from microfilm or otherwise, then the procedures provided for in this section may be followed in the absence of the original check, draft or order.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Although subsection (5) of this section allows District Attorney to impose service charge payable to complainant in amount of $15 as restitution, by its own terms this definition of restitution only applies to Miss. Code Sections 97-19-73 through 97-19-81. Horan, Apr. 14, 1993, A.G. Op. #93-0220.

Under this section, holder of bad check may present complaint to District Attorney, accompanied by original bad check; after receiving bad check complaint from merchant District Attorney may present complaint to judge for warrant to be issued and District Attorney may hold warrant and send notice to defendant; alternatively, under subsection (3), District Attorney may choose not to obtain warrant at that time, but may simply notify defendant that complaint has been filed. Horan, Apr. 21, 1993, A.G. Op. #93-0224.

This section specifically allows the district attorney to hold a warrant without actually serving it while attempting collection of a bad check. Pacific, March 24, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0146.

The service charge which is set out in Section 97-19-57 is one which the maker or drawer can voluntarily pay to the holder to avoid certain criminal presumptions, and does not constitute part of the said debt, nor does this fee meet the definition of "pecuniary damages" for which restitution may be ordered by a court, pursuant to Section 97-19-67(4). Cotten, April 6, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0176.

A Municipal Court Judge may require a convicted defendant to pay the holder the fee set out in Section 97-19-57 where said fee was made part of the restitution agreement under subsection (6) of this section. Cotten, April 6, 1995, A.G. Op. #95-0176.

The statute provides for the payment by the maker of a service charge of $15 for the collection on a bad check after notice of dishonor has been given. Ross, May 15, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0261.

A district attorney may enter into a restitution agreement that contains a partial payment plan for the restitution amount; however, such payment plan may not exceed a period of six months. Crews, July 10, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0372.

The $40.00 referred to in subsection (4) is not a criminal fine and is, rather, a service charge paid by the defendant to the district attorney's office for the benefit of deferring bad check charges against the defendant, and the fee should be paid by the defendant along with the execution of a restitution agreement in order to defer/forbear prosecution on the bad check; thus, as the service charge is not a court ordered fee, the court may not suspend or reduce the amount of the service charge. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Ownership of property.
2. Construction with other law.

1. Ownership of property.

While outright ownership may not need be proven, the person or entity who has been the victim of actions prohibited by the statute should have a colorable claim to the property in question. Gatlin v. State, 724 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 1998).

Although the seizure of money and the institution of forfeiture proceedings does not give the government ownership of the money, it does give the government a claim to the money and, therefore, a person who subsequently attempts to claim the money and attempts to defraud the government of the money can be convicted for a violation of the statute. Gatlin v. State, 724 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 1998).

2. Construction with other law.

Where defendant defrauded furniture sellers by telephone, wire communications, or mail, defendant's second indictment for wire fraud did not conflict with double jeopardy rules, because wire fraud charge was a distinct offense, and required proof of different elements than the initial charge of false pretenses, which had been dismissed. McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 852 So. 2d 577, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 834 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In the context of a fraudulent future promise to pay, a false pretense charge under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-39 does not encompass such facts. A wire fraud charge, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-19-83, does. McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 852 So. 2d 577, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 834 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

1. In general.

False report of public school purporting to be signed by one without authority to do so could not be subject of forgery. Moore v. State, 107 Miss. 181, 65 So. 126 (1914).

To constitute forgery, forged instrument must be one which if genuine might injure another. Moore v. State, 107 Miss. 181, 65 So. 126 (1914).

An indictment is insufficient, where it fails to show how any pecuniary obligation was to be affected. State v. Starling, 90 Miss. 252, 42 So. 203 (1906).

It is essential under this section [Code 1942, § 2174] that there should be identification of the writing in the endorsement with the one found in defendant's possession. Eldridge v. State, 76 Miss. 353, 24 So. 313 (1898).

(1) Any person convicted of forgery when the amount of value involved is under One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) may be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not more than six (6) months, or by a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both. The total value of the forgery by the person from a single victim shall be aggregated in determining the gravity of the offense. Any person convicted of a third or subsequent offense under this subsection where the value of the property is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), shall be punished by imprisonment in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding three (3) years or by a fine not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both.

(2) Any person convicted of forgery when the amount of value involved is One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or more but less than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) shall be punished by imprisonment in the Penitentiary for a term not more than five (5) years, or a fine of not more than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Guilty pleas.
3. Sentence.

1. In general.

Where appellant pleaded guilty to two counts of uttering a forgery in 2004, the trial court did not err by sentencing him to one year in prison and a $1,000 fine for each count under the 2003 amendment to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33. While the judge had the discretion to impose a lesser penalty as the amount forged was less than $500, he was not required to do so. Davis v. State, 975 So. 2d 905 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant was entitled to be sentenced for uttering a forgery under the amended version of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33 because it was amended before his conviction became final and his sentence was legal under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-33; the trial judge could sentence a person to a term of not less than two years nor more than ten years. Peterson v. State, 963 So. 2d 29 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Postconviction relief was denied in a case where defendant entered a guilty plea to the charge of uttering a forgery because a felony sentence was properly imposed under a trial court's discretion where defendant had one indictment returned to the file, and she owed restitution on a charge in another county. Tate v. State, 961 So. 2d 763 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where a sentence of 10 years with five years suspended was entered in a case where defendant entered a guilty plea to the charge of uttering a forgery, defendant was unable to challenge the sentence in a motion for post-conviction relief since it was not raised at the time of sentence; at any rate, the issue of disproportionality was meritless because the sentence was within the limits of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33. Tate v. State, 961 So. 2d 763 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed based on an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel because defendant was correctly informed of the 10-year maximum penalty for uttering forgery; however, the case was remanded for resentencing because plain error was committed when a trial court improperly imposed a 15-year sentence. Jefferson v. State, 958 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel by the failure to inform him of an amended sentence under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33 because he was unable to show that he would have chosen to proceed to trial if he had been informed of such; defendant received a very favorable plea agreement under either sentencing scheme, and therefore it was unlikely that the outcome of the case would have been different. Coleman v. State, 971 So. 2d 637 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 681 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 684 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 686 (Miss. 2007).

In a hearing for post-conviction relief, a trial court did not err by changing a sentence imposed to reflect the amended sentencing range under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33 where the facts showed that defendant entered a valid and voluntary guilty plea, but was sentenced illegally; it was an inadvertent failure of the trial court, the district attorney, and defense counsel to realize there was a change in the maximum sentence. Coleman v. State, 971 So. 2d 637 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 681 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 684 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 686 (Miss. 2007).

Because defendant did not receive a suspended sentence, his sentence was not illegal under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-33(1) (Rev. 2004), and therefore his petition for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed as untimely, as it was not filed until March 2005; under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5(2), defendant only had until June 5, 2003, to file his motion for post-conviction relief, and two years' incarceration plus one year of supervision did not exceed 15 years, the maximum sentence for uttering a forgery. King v. State, 929 So. 2d 373 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant argued that his sentence was contrary to the dictates of Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-34 because by failing to comply with the terms and conditions of postrelease supervision he could be required to serve a term exceeding the maximum allowed under the statute; defendant's sentence totaling 15 years, specifically 10 years to serve with 5 years of postrelease supervision, was unquestionably in accord with Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33 as it was at the time of his sentencing, and therefore, his sentence did not conflict with Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-34. Kemp v. State, 904 So. 2d 1162 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Sentencing defendant to 15 years without possibility of parole, the maximum penalty for forgery, upon conviction for uttering a $35 forged check, was not unconstitutionally disproportionate in violation of Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishment clause, where sentence was imposed under habitual offender statute and defendant's 2 prior burglary convictions were not "truly non-violent" offenses; court noted that defendant's sentence was for 15 years, not life. Burt v. Puckett, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. 1991).

A defendant convicted of uttering a forgery, who was also indicted as, and proven to be, a recidivist, was properly sentenced to 15 years in prison pursuant to Mississippi Code § 99-19-81. Burt v. State, 493 So. 2d 1325 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus dismissed, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. Miss. 1991).

The indictment in a forgery prosecution was not defective for failing to identify the defrauded party where it was obvious that the persons defrauded were those who had signed the forged deed at issue, a copy of which was attached to and made a part of the indictment; the sentence of one year in the county jail was not an abuse of discretion where it was within the limitations of the sentencing statute, even though the statute under which the defendant had been prosecuted did not require a criminal intent. Sherman v. State, 359 So. 2d 1366 (Miss. 1978).

In a prosecution for uttering a forgery, the case would be remanded to determine whether the maximum sentence had been improperly imposed pursuant to the habitual criminal statute, which was not part of the indictment, as required, or whether it had been properly imposed pursuant to the general sentencing statute for this crime. Bell v. State, 355 So. 2d 1106 (Miss. 1978).

In a forgery prosecution, where the face of each check or warrant involved was copied in exact detail in the indictment and each warrant as copied showed not only the payee and his address but the check numbers and other numbers and symbols used by the departments involved, the indictment was not defective on the ground that it did not protect the defendant from prosecution by others because it did not name all the parties involved. Langston v. State, 245 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1971).

Judgments of conviction of forgery were not void because the court was without authority to suspend sentence, since, even if the court did lack such authority, the judgment of conviction would not be affected but only the suspension of sentence. Langston v. State, 245 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1971).

Failure of proof to show where the alleged crime was committed required a reversal and remand of case. Brownlee v. State, 15 So. 2d 209 (Miss. 1943).

2. Guilty pleas.

In a post-conviction appeal in which a state inmate had been sentenced to a term of 10 years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections with 10 years suspended and five years of probation for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33, he argued unsuccessfully that his guilty plea should be set aside because he was incorrectly advised of the minimum sentence; he had been advised of the minimum and maximum sentence for the felony conviction and pled guilty to a felony charge. The minimum sentence for felony uttering a forgery was two years, not zero months, and the maximum sentence for the felony was 10 years; the inmate stated in open court that he knew the minimum and maximum sentence for the felony and that he was guilty of the felony. Bowen v. State, 995 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

3. Sentence.

Circuit court appeared to largely rely on the fact that defendant engaged in a “malicious scheme” to defraud merchants by using a computer program to create counterfeit checks. In line with the proscribed sentencing factors, and the case law, the reviewing court could not find that the circuit court abused its discretion in considering the pending charges against defendant when it sentenced defendant within the statutory limits provided in Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33. Davis v. State, 17 So. 3d 1149 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a post-conviction appeal in which a state inmate had been sentenced to a term of 10 years in the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections with 10 years suspended and five years of probation for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33, he argued unsuccessfully that his sentence was invalid since the amount involved in the crime was $ 250 and the statute provided for misdemeanor penalties when the value involved was less than $ 500. Section 97-21-33 clearly stated that the imposition of the sentence was within the trial judge’s discretion, and, in the present case, the trial judge noted that the inmate had an extensive list of misdemeanors and an admitted addiction to cocaine. Bowen v. State, 995 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Every person who, with the intent to injure or defraud, shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit any instrument or writing being or purporting to be any process issued by any competent court, magistrate, or officer, or being or purporting to be any pleading or proceeding filed or entered in any court of law or equity, or being or purporting to be any certificate, order, or allowance, by any competent court, board, or officer, or being or purporting to be any license or authority authorized by any statute, or any instrument or writing being or purporting to be the act of another, by which any pecuniary demand or obligation shall be or purport to be created, increased, discharged, or diminished, or by which any right or property whatever shall be or purport to be transferred, conveyed, discharged, diminished, or in any manner affected, by which false making, forging, altering or counterfeiting any person may be affected, bound, or in any way injured in his person or property, shall be guilty of forgery.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Instruments which may be subject of forgery.
3. Indictment.
4. Evidence.
5. Instructions.
6. Venue and Jurisdiction.

1. In general.

While it would be possible to commit the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses without committing the crime of forgery, it is extremely unlikely that an accused could be guilty of forgery and at the same time not also be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses. Rowland v. State, 531 So. 2d 627 (Miss. 1988).

Forgery and uttering are two separate and distinct crimes. Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

The three essential elements necessary to constitute the crime of forgery are (1) there must be a false making or other alteration of some instrument in writing, (2) there must be a fraudulent intent, and (3) the instrument must be apparently capable of effecting a fraud. Dunson v. State, 223 Miss. 551, 78 So. 2d 580 (1955).

Fraudulent intent is of the essence of forgery. Hays v. State, 207 Miss. 748, 43 So. 2d 206 (1949); Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

An alteration in an immaterial part of an instrument and which could not injure anyone does not constitute forgery under this section [Code 1942, § 2173]. Wilson v. State, 85 Miss. 687, 38 So. 46 (1905).

2. Instruments which may be subject of forgery.

Check, termed a due bill by prosecuting witness, held subject to forgery. Hodgkin v. State, 172 Miss. 297, 160 So. 562 (1935).

Instrument purporting to be valid teacher's state license authorizing holder to teach in schools of Mississippi held susceptible of forgery. Bradford v. State, 171 Miss. 8, 156 So. 655 (1934).

Accused who executed alleged first-grade teacher's license, forged names of members of board of examiners, and transferred license to another in payment of consideration, and promised that transferee would thereby be enabled to obtain position as teacher, held guilty of uttering a forged instrument. Bradford v. State, 171 Miss. 8, 156 So. 655 (1934).

Warrant on treasurer of county based on regular allowance of the board of supervisors in accordance with a general statute, is the subject of forgery. Saucier v. State, 102 Miss. 647, 59 So. 858, Am. Ann. Cas. 1915A,1044 (1912).

False indorsement of the name of the payee on the back of a warrant on the treasurer of a county is a forgery. Saucier v. State, 102 Miss. 647, 59 So. 858, Am. Ann. Cas. 1915A,1044 (1912).

Instance of paper of which forgery may be predicated in reference to crops. France v. State, 83 Miss. 281, 35 So. 313 (1903).

3. Indictment.

While an indictment charging the forging of one instrument and the uttering of another would doubtless be bad since this would constitute two different transactions, and the accused would be prejudiced, where the crime of forgery and uttering are joined in one indictment, it is not demurrable if the two charges are based on the same transaction or series of connected transactions. Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

Where an indictment was for forgery of a written order for four sacks of rye and where the allegations of the indictment were that the writing involved was capable of effecting a fraud, and was altered with a fraudulent intent, the accused's demurrer to indictment based on the contention that the writing in question was not susceptible of forgery, was properly overruled. Dunson v. State, 223 Miss. 551, 78 So. 2d 580 (1955).

Name of party defrauded must be set out in indictment for forgery as means of identifying offense charged and as protection against another prosecution for same offense. Hays v. State, 207 Miss. 748, 43 So. 2d 206 (1949); Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

Indictment for forgery is defective but amendable when it fails to allege names of individual persons composing the partnership defrauded by forged instrument. Wilson v. State, 204 Miss. 111, 37 So. 2d 19 (1948).

Amending indictment for uttering forgery by changing name of payee of check to conform to proof held not error. Graves v. State, 148 Miss. 62, 114 So. 123 (1927).

An indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2173] is valid when the language sufficiently informs of the nature and cause of the accusation. State v. Dotch, 126 Miss. 837, 89 So. 667 (1921).

For indictment based upon alleged forged and counterfeited check, see State v. Ellis, 112 Miss. 503, 73 So. 565 (1917).

In prosecution for forging school trustee's certificate, indictment must allege and proof must show persons whose names were forged were trustees of the school. Mississippi Cent. R.R. v. Crawford, 96 Miss. 401, 51 So. 466 (1910).

Where extrinsic facts are necessary to be known and considered along with the writing to constitute forgery an indictment therefore must set out such facts as well as the instrument itself. France v. State, 83 Miss. 281, 35 So. 313 (1903).

4. Evidence.

Where defendant made a verbal confession to the charge of uttering forgery for changing a $ 65 check to a $ 650 check, the trial court did not err in denying his motion for a directed verdict. The complainant left a check for $ 65 to pay defendant for cleaning her house; defendant presented a check signed by the complainant to the bank teller for payment in the amount of $ 650. Berry v. State, 907 So. 2d 1011 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 706 (Miss. 2005).

Unexplained or unsatisfactorily explained possession of a forged instrument by the defendant is prima facie evidence that he either committed the forgery himself or procured another to do so. Rowland v. State, 531 So. 2d 627 (Miss. 1988).

Evidence of uttering the forged check was properly admitted in defendant's prosecution for forgery where it tended to establish defendant's fraudulent intent and where the forgery and the uttering took place at the same time and thus were a part of the same transaction. Harrington v. State, 336 So. 2d 721 (Miss. 1976).

In forgery prosecution when property is alleged to be that of named corporation and proof shows that such company is in fact a partnership, variance between indictment and proof is fatal and conviction will not be allowed to stand. Hays v. State, 207 Miss. 748, 43 So. 2d 206 (1949).

To support conviction for forgery, it is necessary that fraudulent intent be proven as laid in indictment. Hays v. State, 207 Miss. 748, 43 So. 2d 206 (1949); Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

In forgery prosecution when property is alleged in indictment to be that of named corporation there must be proof that such company is in fact corporation. Hays v. State, 207 Miss. 748, 43 So. 2d 206 (1949); Criddle v. State, 250 Miss. 328, 165 So. 2d 339 (1964).

Evidence held to sustain conviction for forgery of check. Hodgkin v. State, 172 Miss. 297, 160 So. 562 (1935).

5. Instructions.

Instruction for state that if jury believes from evidence beyond every reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty as charged in indictment is prejudicially erroneous as it does not inform jury of elements of crime of forgery for which defendant was being tried. Wilson v. State, 204 Miss. 111, 37 So. 2d 19 (1948).

In prosecution on bad check instruction failing to state that check must have been uttered “with intent to defraud” was erroneous. May v. State, 115 Miss. 708, 76 So. 636 (1917).

6. Venue and Jurisdiction.

Venue of prosecution for uttering forged teacher’s license held properly laid in county where license was mailed by accused, notwithstanding license was received in another county, where contract was consummated by correspondence originating in county from which license was mailed. Bradford v. State, 171 Miss. 8, 156 So. 655 (1934).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. —Variance between indictment and proof.
4. Sentencing Considerations.

1. In general.

A 14-year sentence for forging and publishing a $40 check, a 2-year consecutive sentence for forging a $50 check, and 2 14-year sentences for forging and publishing checks in the amounts of $54 and $62, though severe, were not so “grossly disproportionate” as to violate the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Wallace v. State, 607 So. 2d 1184 (Miss. 1992).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding for cause a potential juror who was a double first cousin to a defendant charged with uttering a forgery, and with whom defendant had discussed the case prior to trial, despite the juror’s testimony that she could still be fair and impartial. Burt v. State, 493 So. 2d 1325 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus dismissed, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. Miss. 1991).

In absence of anything in the record that suggests that a defendant charged with uttering a forgery was prejudiced to the point of warranting a new trial by the failure to furnish him with a handwriting expert, the trial court did not err in refusing defendant’s request for the expert. Burt v. State, 493 So. 2d 1325 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus dismissed, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. Miss. 1991).

At trial for uttering a forgery, the trial court did err in allowing into evidence a bank check containing disputed writing before the writing was authenticated, where the check was not shown to the jury until the writing was authenticated. Burt v. State, 493 So. 2d 1325 (Miss. 1986), habeas corpus dismissed, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. Miss. 1991).

Determining the voluntariness of a confession at trial of charge of uttering forged instrument is a function of the trial judge, and, where the evidence is conflicting, the Supreme Court must respect the trial judge’s finding. Kelly v. State, 493 So. 2d 984 (Miss. 1986).

Store owner’s in court identification of defendant as person who uttered bad check is not impermissibly tainted by unnecessarily suggestive pretrial lineup where in court identification is based upon owner’s observation of defendant in store and not upon pretrial lineup. Tobias v. State, 472 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1985).

Evidence that defendant charged with uttering forged check had uttered forged check on prior occasion is not admissible for purpose of impeaching defendant’s denial of having previously written check to store at which forged check was cashed. Tobias v. State, 472 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1985).

Testimony of witnesses who positively identify defendant as person who passed bad check on particular date is sufficient to allow jury to convict defendant notwithstanding testimony of defense witness that defendant was in another county entire day. Donald v. State, 472 So. 2d 370 (Miss. 1985).

Evidence of forged checks uttered by defendant other than check upon which check forgery prosecution is based is inadmissible as proof of identity where defendant is regular customer of bank to which check is issued and is remembered by tellers. Donald v. State, 472 So. 2d 370 (Miss. 1985).

A sentence of nine years in the penitentiary upon a conviction of forgery involving a $43 check, was excessive where the evidence supporting the conviction was weak at best. Crapps v. State, 221 So. 2d 722 (Miss. 1969).

Testimony showing possession of suitable tools for making counterfeit coin is inadmissible on the charge of uttering the coin. Burgess v. State, 81 Miss. 482, 33 So. 499 (1903).

2. Indictment.

In a prosecution for forgery of a check wherein the defendant had moved to quash the indictment based upon former §§ 97-23-63 and 97-23-67 on the ground that the check bearing a notation “for painting” had been a written contract and therefore void because it had been made on a Sunday, the trial court did not err in denying the motion where the Sunday-dated check had been cashable and had therefore possessed sufficient legal efficacy to create a liability and where the intent of the “Blue Laws” had never been to make the crime of forgery lawful if perpetrated on Sunday. Harper v. State, 394 So. 2d 311 (Miss. 1981).

Under an indictment for forgery of a written order for four sacks of rye, where the allegations of the indictment were that the writing involved was capable of effecting a fraud, and was altered with a fraudulent intent, the accused’s demurrer to indictment based on the contention that the writing in question was not susceptible of forgery, was properly overruled. Dunson v. State, 223 Miss. 551, 78 So. 2d 580 (1955).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2172] the indictment should allege extrinsic fact showing how the writings could have been used as evidences of debt or engagements for the payment of money. Cohran v. State, 219 Miss. 767, 70 So. 2d 46 (1954).

3. —Variance between indictment and proof.

Amendment to an indictment, after state had closed its case in an uttering a forgery trial, to show that a named person was a part owner, instead of agent, of store which had received check, was one of form, not of substance, and would not support defendant’s motion for a directed verdict. Burt v. State, 493 So. 2d 1325

(Miss. 1986), habeas corpus dismissed, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. Miss. 1991).

In a forgery prosecution, the fact that the indictment charged that the defendant had intended to defraud certain persons doing business at a store, by the cashing of a forged check, while a witness on cross-examination remarked that the business was a corporation, did not constitute a material variance, for there was not even a remote chance that such inconsistency could result in subjecting the defendant to another prosecution. Smith v. State, 222 So. 2d 688 (Miss. 1969).

Variance is fatal where evidence showed different check from that described in indictment. Bradley v. State, 128 Miss. 114, 90 So. 627 (1922).

4. Sentencing Considerations.

Court had the right to revoke petitioner’s suspended sentence for uttering forgery because he tested positive for marijuana and was terminated from a work program. He was not entitled to postconviction relief, because he had signed a waiver of his right to a probation revocation hearing. Gates v. State, 919 So. 2d 170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Court did not improperly rely on evidence of a prior criminal conviction to justify the length of the sentence in defendant’s forgery case where defendant had two prior felony convictions, a pending charge of possession of paraphernalia, and numerous arrests. Swindle v. State, 881 So. 2d 174 (Miss. 2004).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Indictment.
3. Evidence.
4. Instructions.
5. Sentencing considerations.

1. In general.

Denial of the prisoner's postconviction relief motion without an evidentiary hearing was proper where the appellate court found there was no defect in the factual basis for the prisoner's guilty plea to uttering a forgery, as the prisoner understood the charge and also signed a petition to enter a guilty plea, agreeing that the attorney had explained the charges. Moore v. State, 830 So. 2d 1274 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Sentencing defendant to 15 years without possibility of parole, the maximum penalty for forgery, upon conviction for uttering a $35 forged check, was not unconstitutionally disproportionate in violation of Federal Constitution's Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishment clause, where sentence was imposed under habitual offender statute and defendant's 2 prior burglary convictions were not “truly non-violent” offenses; court noted that defendant's sentence was for 15 years, not life. Burt v. Puckett, 933 F.2d 350 (5th Cir. 1991).

A 15-year sentence without hope of parole, imposed upon a defendant as a habitual offender, for uttering a forged check in the amount of $500, did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Barnwell v. State, 567 So. 2d 215 (Miss. 1990).

An accused, who wrongfully obtained possession of a check and, after forging on the back of the check the name of the payee, exhibited the same to a corporation, representing it to be a genuine instrument, and obtained the face value thereof, was guilty of the crime of uttering and publishing a forged check knowing it to be forged. Osby v. State, 229 Miss. 660, 91 So. 2d 748 (1957).

To constitute offense of uttering forged instrument, bill, or coin, knowledge of forgery on part of accused is necessary.

Keyes v. State, 166 Miss. 316, 148 So. 361 (1933).

2. Indictment.

An indictment charging forgery was sufficient where it contained all of the elements necessary to charge the offense. Veal v. State, 357 So. 2d 943 (Miss. 1978).

A defendant who was shown by testimony to have induced another to forge the name of the payee on a check, was not entitled to acquittal of the forgery charged in the indictment on the theory that the indictment did not inform the defendant that he was being tried as an accessory before the fact of forgery, since, as an accessory before the fact, the defendant was considered a principal under Code 1942, § 1995. Ellis v. State, 255 So. 2d 325 (Miss. 1971).

A conviction on an indictment charging the defendant with the crime of uttering and publishing as true a forged check, knowing the instrument to be forged, was not sustained by proof that he was found in possession of a check upon which an indorsement had been forged. Cogsdell v. State, 183 Miss. 826, 185 So. 206 (1938).

3. Evidence.

Evidence supported defendant's conviction of uttering forgery because (1) the checks presented to a check cashing business were in defendant's prior possession; (2) defendant admitted to knowledge and involvement in a check-cashing scheme; and (3) there was no record of an account at a bank belonging to the business that issued the check which defendant actually cashed, and no evidence that the company even existed. Jones v. State, 130 So. 3d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013), writ of certiorari denied by 131 So. 3d 577, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 65 (Miss. 2014).

Where defendant testified that an employee gave him fifty dollars to cash a payroll check because the employee did not have the appropriate identification to cash the check, defendant's conviction for uttering a forgery was supported by sufficient evidence because an employer testified that he did not authorize anyone to write the check to defendant and defendant's testimony that he empathized with the employee's situation and that he went to talk to the employer after hearing that the check was stolen did not sufficiently demonstrate defendant's lack of guilty knowledge and criminal intent. McGlasten v. State, 109 So. 3d 620 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant's convictions for uttering a forgery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-1 and for conspiracy under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-1-1 were affirmed because there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that defendant possessed the forged checks and attempted to pass these checks off as true and although the co-conspirator was an admitted drug addict, his testimony was not self-contradictory or thoroughly impeached. Nelson v. State, 32 So. 3d 534 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 31 So. 3d 1217, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 186 (Miss. 2010).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant pled guilty to uttering a forgery because a claim that the charge should have been for false pretenses instead was procedurally barred under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-21(1) since the issue was not raised in the plea; despite the bar, the issue was meritless because defendant admitted in the plea colloquy that she knowingly created a fictitious name for use on a bank account and presented a check drawn on that account for payment at a retail store. Tate v. State, 961 So. 2d 763 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for forgery; a convenience store clerk testified that defendant presented a check at the convenience store for cashing. The check was not issued in the ordinary course of business; the evidence, taken in its entirety, showed that defendant knew that the check was forged. Duhart v. State, 927 So. 2d 768 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied by the trial court where considering the strength of all inferences and circumstances of possession by defendant of the victim's check, together with his attempt to negotiate the check at the bank, the jury was fully warranted in concluding that defendant was guilty of uttering a forged instrument and petit larceny. Miles v. State, 864 So. 2d 963 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

State succeeded in proving all of the elements of the crime of uttering a forgery where there was no dispute that the check presented at the bank for deposit was in defendant's possession prior to being presented and defendant did not offer evidence that there was another person who allegedly presented the check to defendant in exchange for an automobile; defendant presented nothing to explain satisfactorily his possession of the forgery. Cannady v. State, 855 So. 2d 1000 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), writ of certiorari denied by 859 So. 2d 1017, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 496 (Miss. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where (1) the defendant claimed that he was only helping a young man by picking up things the young man had dropped, but (2) all of the witnesses for the state testified it was in fact the defendant who stood at the customer service counter and offered a check to be cashed, (3) none of the witnesses for the state testified that there was any young man there at all, and (4) the state, in addition, put on evidence that the defendant asked for the check to be cashed, that he provided false identification when asked for it, and that he even endorsed the check in the plain sight of the store owner. Wiseman v. State, 771 So. 2d 977 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a forgery prosecution, a witness' reviewing of a photograph of the forgery suspect taken by a store security system at the time that the suspect cashed the forged check did not impermissibly taint the witness' in-court identification of the defendant so as to render it inadmissible. Such photographs may properly be used to refresh the recollection of an eyewitness since they show the person who actually committed the crime as opposed to some possible suspect in the police files. George v. State, 521 So. 2d 1287 (Miss. 1988).

Evidence that the signee is a fictitious person is admissible to show that the instrument is a forgery. Sanders v. State, 219 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 913, 90 S. Ct. 228, 24 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1969).

Where an indictment, charging the accused with the crime of uttering and publishing a forged check, knowing it to be forged, alleged that the check was cashed by a corporation, it was not reversible error to permit the cashier of the company to testify orally that the company was a corporation. Osby v. State, 229 Miss. 660, 91 So. 2d 748 (1957).

In prosecution for crime of uttering and publishing as true, with intent to defraud, a forged and counterfeit check, knowing such instrument to be forged, evidence that a name signed to an instrument is that of a fictitious person is admissible to prove that the instrument is a forgery. Coward v. State, 223 Miss. 538, 78 So. 2d 605 (1955).

In a prosecution for the crime of uttering and publishing as true, with intent to defraud, a forged and counterfeit check, knowing such an instrument to be forged, evidence by persons so situated that they would probably know the signer if she existed is admissible and they may testify that they did not know of any such person. Coward v. State, 223 Miss. 538, 78 So. 2d 605 (1955).

Knowledge on part of accused that bill uttered by him was forged may be supplied by circumstantial evidence. Keyes v. State, 166 Miss. 316, 148 So. 361 (1933).

Evidence held insufficient to support conviction under indictment charging uttering of United States government note which had been raised or altered. Keyes v. State, 166 Miss. 316, 148 So. 361 (1933).

4. Instructions.

An instruction for the prosecution, granted in a trial of an indictment under Code 1942, § 2179, which stated the elements of the offense in the alternative that the defendant either knew, or had reasonable reason to believe, that he was uttering a forged instrument would ordinarily be fatally defective, for the language of the section requires that the person uttering the instrument must know it to be forged; but such defect may be cured by properly phrased instructions granted on behalf of the defendant. Pierce v. State, 213 So. 2d 769 (Miss. 1968).

5. Sentencing considerations.

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed based on an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel because defendant was correctly informed of the 10-year maximum penalty for uttering forgery; however, the case was remanded for resentencing because plain error was committed when a trial court improperly imposed a 15-year sentence. Jefferson v. State, 958 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because defendant did not receive a suspended sentence, his sentence was not illegal under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-33(1) (Rev. 2004), and therefore his petition for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed as untimely, as it was not filed until March 2005; under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5(2), defendant only had until June 5, 2003, to file his motion for postconviction relief, and two years' incarceration plus one year of supervision did not exceed 15 years, the maximum sentence for uttering a forgery. King v. State, 929 So. 2d 373 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Court did not improperly rely on evidence of a prior criminal conviction to justify the length of the sentence in defendant's forgery case where defendant had two prior felony convictions, a pending charge of possession of paraphernalia, and numerous arrests. Swindle v. State, 881 So. 2d 174 (Miss. 2004).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

The enactment of Code 1942, § 2148.5, dealing specifically with fraudulent use of credit cards does not pre-empt the field and does not preclude prosecution under the general forgery statute of a defendant charged with using a stolen credit card to obtain goods and signing the credit card owner's name to the credit card slip or invoice. McCrary v. State, 210 So. 2d 877 (Miss. 1968).

To constitute "forgery," there must be false making or alteration of written instrument and fraudulent intent, and instrument must be apparently capable of effecting fraud. State v. Ellis, 161 Miss. 361, 137 So. 102 (1931).

Deed not under seal purporting to have been executed prior to the abolishment of private seals was a proper subject of forgery. State v. Saucier, 102 Miss. 887, 60 So. 3 (1912).

Alteration of existing instrument may constitute forgery. Donaldson v. State, 102 Miss. 346, 59 So. 99 (1912).

Instrument alleged to be forged, if available, must be produced in evidence. Deal v. State, 96 Miss. 82, 50 So. 495 (1909).

Forgery is not committed by the act of inducing one to sign a conveyance of land on false representations that the paper was a pension paper. The act under the common law was that of a cheat or swindle. Johnson v. State, 87 Miss. 502, 39 So. 692 (1906).

ARTICLE 2.

FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY FOR VIOLATIONS OF TRADEMARK AND RECORDINGS LAWS.

SEC.

- 97-21-101. Property used in trademark and recordings violations subject to civil forfeiture; who may institute proceedings.
- 97-21-103. Seizure and forfeiture proceedings; determination of property owner; determination of existence of parties with security interests affecting property; notice to holders of security interests; hearing; disposition of forfeited property and proceeds.

§ 97-21-101. Property used in trademark and recordings violations subject to civil forfeiture; who may institute proceedings.

(1) All property, real or personal, including money, used in the course of, intended for use in the course of, derived from, or realized through, conduct in violation of Section 97-21-53, 97-21-55, 97-21-57 or 97-23-89 is subject to civil forfeiture to the state pursuant to the provisions of Section 97-21-103; provided, however, that a forfeiture of personal property encumbered by a bona fide security interest or real property encumbered by a bona fide mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance of record shall be subject to the interest of the secured party or subject to the interest of the holder of the mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance of record if such secured party or holder neither had knowledge of or consented to the act or omission.

(2) Property subject to forfeiture may be seized by law enforcement officers upon process issued by any appropriate court having jurisdiction over the property. Seizure without process may be made if:

(a) The seizure is incident to an arrest or a search under a search warrant or an inspection under a lawful administrative inspection;

(b) The property subject to seizure has been the subject of a prior judgment in favor of the state in a criminal injunction or forfeiture proceeding based upon this article.

(3) The Attorney General, any district attorney or any state agency having jurisdiction over conduct in violation of Section 97-21-53, 97-21-55, 97-21-57 or 97-23-89 may institute civil proceedings under this section. In any action brought under this section, the circuit court shall proceed as soon as practicable to the hearing and determination. Pending final determination, the circuit court may at any time enter such injunctions or restraining orders, or take such actions, including the acceptance of satisfactory performance bonds, as the court may deem proper.

(4) Any aggrieved person may institute a civil proceeding against any person or enterprise convicted of engaging in activity in violation of Section 97-21-53, 97-21-55, 97-21-57 or 97-23-89. In such proceeding, relief shall be granted in conformity with the principles that govern the granting of injunctive relief from threatened loss or damage in other civil cases, except that no showing of immediate and irreparable injury, loss or damage to the person shall have to be made.

(5) The Attorney General may, upon timely application, intervene in any civil action or proceeding brought under this section if he certifies that, in his opinion, the action or proceeding is of general public importance. In such action or proceeding, the state shall be entitled to the same relief as if the Attorney General instituted the action or proceeding.

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a criminal or civil action or proceeding under this article may be commenced at any time within five (5) years after the conduct in violation of law terminates or the cause of action accrues. If a criminal prosecution or civil action or other proceeding is brought, or intervened in, to punish, prevent or restrain any violation of law, the running of the period of limitations prescribed by this section with respect to any cause of action arising under this section which is based, in whole or in part, upon any matter complained of in any such prosecution, action or proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency of such prosecution, action or proceeding and for two (2) years following its termination.

(7) The application of one (1) civil remedy under any provision of this article shall not preclude the application of any other remedy, civil or criminal, under this article or any other provision of law. Civil remedies under this article are supplemental.

§ 97-21-103. Seizure and forfeiture proceedings; determination of property owner; determination of existence of parties with security interests affecting property; notice to holders of security interests; hearing; disposition of forfeited property and proceeds.

(1) When any property is seized pursuant to Section 97-21-101, proceedings under this section shall be instituted promptly.

(2)(a) A petition for forfeiture shall be filed promptly in the name of the State of Mississippi with the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the seizure is made. A copy of such petition shall be served upon the following persons by service of process in the same manner as in civil cases:

(i) The owner of the property, if address is known;

(ii) Any secured party who has registered his lien or filed a financing statement as provided by law, if the identity of such secured party can be ascertained by the state by making a good faith effort to ascertain the identity of such secured party as described in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) of this subsection;

(iii) Any other bona fide lienholder or secured party or other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest of whom the state has actual knowledge;

(iv) A holder of a mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance of record, if the property is real estate by making a good faith inquiry as described in paragraph (g) of this section; and

(v) Any person in possession of property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized.

(b) If the property is a motor vehicle susceptible of titling under the Mississippi Motor Vehicle Title Law and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle has been titled, the state shall make inquiry of the Department of Revenue as to what the records of the Department of Revenue show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien or security interest which affects the vehicle.

(c) If the property is a motor vehicle and is not titled in the State of Mississippi, then the state shall attempt to ascertain the name and address of the person in whose name the vehicle is licensed, and if the vehicle is licensed in a state which has in effect a certificate of title law, the state shall make inquiry of the appropriate agency of that state as to what the records of the agency show as to who is the record owner of the vehicle and who, if anyone, holds any lien, security interest, or other instrument in the nature of a security device which affects the vehicle.

(d) If the property is of a nature that a financing statement is required by the laws of this state to be filed to perfect a security interest affecting the property and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that a financing statement covering the security interest has been filed under the laws of this state, the state shall make inquiry of the appropriate office designated in Section 75-9-501 as to what the records show as to who is the record owner of the property and who, if anyone, has filed a financing statement affecting the property.

(e) If the property is an aircraft or part thereof and if there is any reasonable cause to believe that an instrument in the nature of a security device affects the property, then the state shall make inquiry of the administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration as to what the records of the administrator show as to who is the record owner of the property and who, if anyone, holds an instrument in the nature of a security device which affects the property.

(f) In the case of all other personal property subject to forfeiture, if there is any reasonable cause to believe that an instrument in the nature of a security device affects the property, then the state shall make a good faith inquiry to identify the holder of any such instrument.

(g) If the property is real estate, the state shall make inquiry at the appropriate places to determine who is the owner of record and who, if anyone is a holder of a bona fide mortgage, deed of trust, lien or encumbrance.

(h) In the event the answer to an inquiry states that the record owner of the property is any person other than the person who was in possession of it when it was seized, or states that any person holds any lien, encumbrance, security interest, other interest in the nature of a security interest, mortgage or deed of trust which affects the property, the state shall cause any record owner and also any lienholder, secured party, other person who holds an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest, or holder of an encumbrance, mortgage or deed of trust which affects the property to be named in the petition of forfeiture and to be served with process in the same manner as in civil cases.

(i) If the owner of the property cannot be found and served with a copy of the petition of forfeiture, or if no person was in possession of the property subject to forfeiture at the time that it was seized and the owner of the property is unknown, the state shall file with the clerk of the court in which the proceeding is pending an affidavit to such effect, whereupon the clerk of the court shall publish notice of the hearing addressed to "the Unknown Owner of _____," filling in the blank space with a reasonably detailed description of the property subject to forfeiture. Service by publication shall contain the other requisites prescribed in Section 11-33-41, and shall be served as provided in Section 11-33-37 for publication of notice for attachments at law.

(j) No proceedings instituted pursuant to the provisions of this article shall proceed to hearing unless the judge conducting the hearing is satisfied that this section has been complied with. Any answer received from an inquiry required by paragraphs (b) through (g) of this section shall be introduced into evidence at the hearing.

(3)(a) An owner of property that has been seized shall file a verified answer within twenty (20) days after the completion of service of process. If no answer is filed, the court shall hear evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture and forfeit the property to the state. If an answer is filed, a time for hearing on forfeiture shall be set within thirty (30) days of filing the answer or at the succeeding term of court if court would not be in progress within thirty (30) days after filing the answer. Provided, however, that upon request by the state or the owner of the property, the court may postpone said forfeiture hearing to a date past the time any criminal action is pending against said owner.

(b) If the owner of the property has filed a verified answer denying that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the burden is on the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings to prove that the property is subject to forfeiture. The burden of proof placed upon the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings shall be clear and convincing proof. However, if no answer has been filed by the owner of the property, the petition for forfeiture may be introduced into evidence and is prima facie evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture.

(c) At the hearing any claimant of any right, title, or interest in the property may prove his lien, encumbrance, security interest, other interest in the nature of a security interest, mortgage or deed of trust to be bona fide and created without knowledge or consent that the property was to be used so as to cause the property to be subject to forfeiture.

(d) If it is found that the property is subject to forfeiture, then the judge shall forfeit the property to the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings. However, if proof at the hearing discloses that the interest of any bona fide lienholder, secured party, other person holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest or any holder of a bona fide encumbrance, mortgage or deed of trust is greater than or equal to the present value of the property, the court shall order the property released to him. If such interest is less than the present value of the property and if the proof shows that the property is subject to forfeiture, the court shall order the property forfeited to the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings.

(4)(a) All personal property, including money, which is forfeited to the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings and is not capable of being sold at public auction shall be liquidated and the proceeds, after deduction of all storage and court costs, shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited in the General Fund of the state or in the general fund of the county of the jurisdiction instituting proceedings.

(b) All real estate which is forfeited to the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings shall be sold to the highest bidder at a public auction to be conducted by the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings at such place, on such notice and in accordance with the same procedure, as far as practicable, as is required in the case of sales of land under execution of law. The proceeds of such sale shall first be applied to the cost and expense in administering and conducting such sale, then to the satisfaction of all mortgages, deeds of trusts, liens and encumbrances of record on such property. All proceeds in excess of the amount necessary for the cost of the sale of such land and the satisfaction of any liens thereon shall be deposited in the General Fund of the State Treasury or in the general fund of the county of the jurisdiction instituting proceedings.

(c) All other property that has been seized by the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings and that has been forfeited shall, except as otherwise provided, be sold at a public auction for cash by the state or the jurisdiction instituting proceedings to the highest and best bidder after advertising the sale for at least once each week for three (3) consecutive weeks, the last notice to appear not more than ten (10) days nor less than five (5) days prior to such sale, in a newspaper having a general circulation in the jurisdiction instituting proceedings or throughout the State of Mississippi. Such notices shall contain a description of the property to be sold and a statement of the time and place of sale. It shall not be necessary to the validity of such sale either to have the property present at the place of sale or to have the name of the owner thereof stated in such notice. The proceeds of the sale shall be delivered to the circuit clerk and shall be disposed of as follows:

(i) To any bona fide lienholder, secured party, or other party holding an interest in the property in the nature of a security interest, to the extent of his interest; and

(ii) The balance, if any, after deduction of all storage and court costs, shall be forwarded to the State Treasurer and deposited with and used as general funds of the state or to the jurisdiction instituting proceedings and deposited in the county general fund.

(d) The Department of Revenue shall issue a certificate of title to any person who purchases property under the provisions of this section when a certificate of title is required under the laws of this state.

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, association or corporation to misrepresent the true nature of its business by use of the words “manufacturer,” “wholesaler,” “retailer,” or words of similar import or for any person, firm, association or corporation to represent itself as selling at wholesale, or use the word “wholesale” in any form of sale or advertising unless such person, firm, association or corporation is actually selling at wholesale those items advertised for the purpose of resale. For the purpose of this section, the term “wholesale” shall be defined as a sale made for the purpose of resale by the purchaser on which a wholesale sales tax is charged, and not one made to a consuming purchaser on which a retail sales tax is charged.

However, this section shall in nowise affect or prohibit a corporation from using the word “wholesale” in its corporate name even though such corporation also does a retail business. However, if it does a retail business, it must indicate in its advertisements that such business is being conducted by its retail division, or that such advertised products are to be sold only at retail.

(2) The violation of this section shall constitute a misdemeanor, and any person or firm convicted of violating this section shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00).

Any person who, with intent to sell or in any way dispose of merchandise, securities, service, or anything offered by such person, directly or indirectly, to the public for sale or distribution, or who, with intent to increase the consumption of or demand for such merchandise, securities, service or other thing, or to induce the public in any manner to enter into any obligation relating thereto, or to acquire title thereto, or an interest therein, makes, publishes, disseminates, circulates or places before the public, or causes, directly or indirectly, to be made, published, disseminated, circulated or placed before the public within the state, in a newspaper or other publication, or in the form of a book, notice, handbill, poster, bill, circular, pamphlet or letter, or by a label affixed to the merchandise or its container, or in any other way, an advertisement of any sort regarding merchandise, securities, service or anything so offered to the public, which advertisement contains any assertion, representation or statement of fact which is untrue, deceptive or misleading, including but not limited to representing himself as selling at wholesale unless he is actually selling at wholesale those items so represented, and which such person knew, or might on reasonable investigation have ascertained to be untrue, deceptive or misleading, shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00), and the offending person, whether found guilty or not, may be held civilly responsible in tort for damages to persons or property proximately resulting from a violation of this section. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Because plaintiff former smoker identified no representations about defendant tobacco producers' cigarettes, much less any that were untrue, deceptive, or misleading, and conceded the advertising was not or misleading and that it did not cause her to start or continue smoking, a false advertising claim under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-3 failed. Woods v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51565 (S.D. Miss. June 18, 2009).

The plaintiffs were properly denied leave to amend the complaint in order to add a claim for misleading and deceptive advertising practices in relation to the home they rented where the advertisement for the home merely described the nature of the house in general terms, and no representations were made in the ad the defects alleged by the plaintiffs. Sweatt v. Murphy, 733 So. 2d 207 (Miss. 1998).

Allegation that advertisement for student loans was misleading because primary purpose was to sell life insurance states claim under this section; punitive damages are not available where evidence in case does not support claim for fraud and is sufficient under statute only because statute allows recovery for advertising which is merely "misleading" as opposed to fraudulent. Watson v. First Commonwealth Life Ins. Co., 686 F. Supp. 153 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

Allegations that insurance company's advertisement for student loans was misleading because primary purpose of advertisement was to sell life insurance states claim under Miss. Code Annotated § 97-23-3, only because statute allows recovery for advertising which is merely "misleading" as opposed to fraudulent. Watson v. First Commonwealth Life Ins. Co., 686 F. Supp. 153 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

The statement in an advertisement issued by a supermarket in which it was stated that a notary had "purchased" products in a competitor's market as part of a comparison shopping endeavor when, in fact, the notary had merely accompanied an employee of the supermarket who made the purchases, did not constitute a violation of the statute where the portion of the advertisement concerning the notary's role had been an insignificant part of the ad, had been placed in a small area in an inconspicuous spot, and had only verified that the ad had been correct according to him and where there was no proof that any customers had in any way been misled or deceived by the misstatement which was subsequently corrected. Dixieland Food Stores, Inc. v. Kelly's Big Star, Inc., 391 So. 2d 633 (Miss. 1980).

This provision has been held constitutional. Alcorn Cotton Oil Co. v. State, 100 Miss. 299, 56 So. 397 (1911).

Code 1906, § 1317, not repealed by Acts 1908, ch. 107 § 14. Alcorn Cotton Oil Co. v. State, 100 Miss. 299, 56 So. 397 (1911).

§ 97-23-17. Customers, patrons or clients; right to choose or refuse to serve; penalty for violation.

(1) Every person, firm or corporation engaged in any public business, trade or profession of any kind whatsoever in the State of Mississippi, including, but not restricted to, hotels, motels, tourist courts, lodging houses, restaurants, dining room or lunch counters, barber shops, beauty parlors, theatres, moving picture shows, or other places of entertainment and amusement, including public parks and swimming pools, stores of any kind wherein merchandise is offered for sale, is hereby authorized and empowered to choose or select the person or persons he or it desires to do business with, and is further authorized and empowered to refuse to sell to, wait upon or serve any person that the owner, manager or employee of such public place of business does not desire to sell to, wait upon or serve. The provisions of this section shall not apply to corporations or associations engaged in the business of selling electricity, natural gas, or water to the general public, or furnishing telephone service to the public.

(2) Any public place of business may, if it so desires, display a sign posted in said place of business serving notice upon the general public that "the management reserves the right to refuse to sell to, wait upon or serve any person," however, the display of such a sign shall not be a prerequisite to exercising the authority conferred by this section.

(3) Any person who enters a public place of business in this state, or upon the premises thereof, and is requested or ordered to leave therefrom by the owner, manager or any employee thereof, and after having been so requested or ordered to leave, refuses so to do, shall be guilty of a trespass and upon conviction therefor shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00) or imprisoned in jail not more than six (6) months, or both such fine and imprisonment.

2. Exclusion because of prior shoplifting incident.

1. In general.

Mississippi, by passage of this section [Code 1942, § 2046.5], merely restated the common law rule allowing restaurateurs to serve whomever they wished. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 409 F.2d 121 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968), rev'd on other grounds, 398 U.S. 144, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970).

Where the plaintiff in an action for damages against a variety store can show that the defendant discriminated against her pursuant to a custom, enforced by the state under this section [Code 1942, § 2046.5], of refusing luncheon service to whites in the company of Negroes, she will satisfy the state action requirement of 42 USC § 1983 which provides that any person who "under cover of" state law deprives another of "rights, privileges, or immunities" secured by the constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 252 F. Supp. 140 (S.D.N.Y. 1966), aff'd, 409 F.2d 121 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968), rev'd on other grounds, 398 U.S. 144, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970).

Persons arrested for violating ordinances by parading without a permit, in an antisegregation demonstration, held not entitled to habeas corpus in federal court on ground that mass arrests had so loaded state courts as to deprive them of an adequate remedy under state law. Brown v. Rayfield, 320 F.2d 96 (5th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 902, 84 S. Ct. 191, 11 L. Ed. 2d 143 (1963).

An action to enjoin enforcement of the statute, the court, in lieu of injunctive relief, declared the rights of complainants to the use of public facilities. Clark v. Thompson, 206 F. Supp. 539 (S.D. Miss. 1962), aff'd, 313 F.2d 637 (5th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 951, 84 S. Ct. 440, 11 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1963).

In an action for an injunction restraining defendants from enforcing or executing subsection (1) of this section [Code 1942, § 2046.5] subsection (7) of Code 1942, § 2056, and § 4065.3, against the plaintiffs by preventing them from using public recreational facilities on an integrated and equal basis solely on the ground of race and color, the federal three-judge statutory court would be dissolved and the case left for decision of a single federal district judge, where it appeared that what plaintiffs actually sought was to attack a pattern or practice rather than the constitutional validity of a statute or actions under it. Clark v. Thompson, 204 F. Supp. 30 (S.D. Miss. 1962).

2. Exclusion because of prior shoplifting incident.

Premises liability action was dismissed on summary judgment because newly discovered evidence clearly established a customer's status as a trespasser at the time of her alleged abduction from a store's parking lot where the store was authorized to ban her from the store under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-17 after a prior shoplifting incident, the customer failed to show that store breached its duty to a trespasser, and store was immune from liability pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-103(2) where the customer had committed a criminal trespass under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-97 at the time of the incident. Bates v. Wal-Mart Stores, 413 F. Supp. 2d 763 (S.D. Miss. 2006).

§ 97-23-19. Embezzlement; by agents, bailees, trustees, servants and persons generally.

If any person shall embezzle or fraudulently secrete, conceal, or convert to his own use, or make way with, or secrete with intent to embezzle or convert to his own use, any goods, rights in action, money, or other valuable security, effects, or property of any kind or description which shall have come or been entrusted to his care or possession by virtue of his office, position, place, or employment, either in mass or otherwise, he shall be guilty of embezzlement.

(a) Any person guilty of embezzlement of any goods, rights of action, money, or other valuable security, effects or property of any kind or description with a value of less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), shall be guilty of misdemeanor embezzlement, and, upon conviction thereof, may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six (6) months, or fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or both. Any person convicted of a third or subsequent offense under this subsection where the value of the property is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for a term not exceeding three (3) years or fined an amount not exceeding Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00), or both.

(b) Any person guilty of embezzlement of any goods, rights in action, money, or other valuable security, effects or property of any kind or description with a value of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or more but less than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), shall be guilty of felony embezzlement, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the custody of the Department of Corrections not more than five (5) years, or fined not more than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), or both.

(c) Any person guilty of embezzlement of any goods, rights in action, money, or other valuable security, effects or property of any kind or description with a value of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) or more but less than Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), shall be guilty of felony embezzlement, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary for not more than ten (10) years, or fined not more than Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), or both.

(d) Any person guilty of embezzlement of any goods, rights in action, money, or other valuable security, effects or property of any kind or description with a value of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) or more, shall be guilty of felony embezzlement, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the Penitentiary not more than twenty (20) years, or fined not more than Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), or both.

1. In general.

In defendant's cocaine possession case, although a witness's misdemeanor embezzlement conviction was admissible for impeachment purposes under Miss. R. Evid. 609, the Mississippi Supreme Court questioned the probative value of a misdemeanor-embezzlement conviction on a witness's truthfulness, particularly in light of its pronouncement that theft crimes were outside the scope of those permitted for impeachment purposes under Rule 609(a)(2). Baskin v. State, — So. 3d —, 2014 Miss. LEXIS 68 (Miss. Jan. 30, 2014).

There is no lesser-included offense of embezzlement. Lockett v. State, 989 So. 2d 995 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

The legislature's narrow and precise language in the embezzlement statute does not include limited liability companies because Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 plainly does not allow agents of unincorporated entities to be subjected to prosecution for embezzlement. Champluvier v. State, 942 So. 2d 145 (Miss. 2006).

In her embezzlement prosecution, defendant failed to satisfy the first and third prongs of the four-prong Brady test as she failed to show that the evidence was favorable or that the State even possessed the subject bank records (several banks were involved). Furthermore, there was no proof in the record that would have allowed the appellate court to decide whether the evidence allegedly suppressed was favorable or unfavorable and defendant also failed to satisfy the second prong under the Brady test, as she failed to prove that she did not possess the evidence nor could she obtain it herself with any reasonable diligence. Montgomery v. State, 891 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's period of supervised release was not counted toward his time served; therefore, defendant's sentence of three years to serve, seven years suspended, and five years of post release supervision was within the ten years allowable pursuant to the embezzlement statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19. Brown v. State, 872 So. 2d 96 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

As a trial judge clearly had authority via Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-32 to impose a fine in addition to the penitentiary sentence imposed under the felony portion of the embezzlement statute, former Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 (which provided for a fine only when being sentenced as a misdemeanor), the trial judge properly rejected the inmate's argument that upon payment of the fine he had completed his misdemeanor sentence and was entitled to release from the prison sentence. Gulley v. State, 870 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 2004).

A transaction between a wholesale seller of automobiles and a buyer constituted a sale rather than an entrustment of the automobiles and a subsequent embezzlement thereof where the transaction involved 13 automobiles, 11 of which were paid for after the buyer had taken possession of them and 2 of which were not paid for. Reed v. State, 523 So. 2d 62 (Miss. 1988).

Under this section prohibiting embezzlement by an agent, an escrow agent constituted a special agent for both parties to the escrow agreement, and the escrow agent therefore was an agent for one of such parties as alleged in the indictment within the meaning of this section. Cowart v. State, 349 So. 2d 506 (Miss. 1977).

When a person, even an agent of the owner, takes possession of property with the unlawful intent to feloniously convert the property to his own use at the time he acquires possession, he is guilty of larceny and not embezzlement. Mahfouz v. State, 303 So. 2d 461 (Miss. 1974).

Embezzlement involves wrongful or fraudulent appropriation of another's property. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Constantin, 247 Miss. 812, 157 So. 2d 642 (1963).

Conduct of service station operator required to report daily sales, in understating their amount, held embezzlement. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Constantin, 247 Miss. 812, 157 So. 2d 642 (1963).

Failure of owner's son-in-law and employee to return automobile with which he had been entrusted, constitutes embezzlement but not larceny. Peerless Ins. Co. v. St. Laurent, 247 Miss. 134, 154 So. 2d 135 (1963).

To constitute embezzlement, something must have been done in execution of an intention to appropriate property in the possession of the accused to his own use. Grasky v. State, 243 Miss. 379, 137 So. 2d 820 (1962).

In a prosecution for the theft of certain cattle, defendant's co-indictee, who was the cattle manager and employee of the partnership owning the cattle, but who could only make sales for partnership upon authorization of one of the partners, was a mere caretaker, with custody of the property, so that the offense charged was grand larceny as contrasted with embezzlement. Mills v. State, 231 Miss. 641, 97 So. 2d 386 (1957).

Embezzlement is the wrongful appropriation or conversion of property where the original taking was lawful, or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the taking involves a trespass, and a felonious intent must exist at the time of such taking. Jackson v. State, 211 Miss. 828, 52 So. 2d 914 (1951).

This section [Code 1942, § 2115] includes not only trustees, factors, carriers, and bailees of private persons, but those of both artificial and natural persons as corporations. State v. Journey, 105 Miss. 516, 62 So. 354 (1913).

"Amount" and "value" synonymous when applied to money. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

2. Indictment.

Indictment charging defendant with embezzlement sufficiently provided notice of the essential elements of the crime of embezzlement, and the indictment cited to the statute proscribing embezzlement; accordingly, the indictment was proper. Wilson v. State, 12 So. 3d 8 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 14 So. 3d 731, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 306 (Miss. 2009).

Indictment charging defendant alleged that she had embezzled property "owned by an individual d/b/a a named engineering business." At the close of the State's case-in-chief, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict alleging that the indictment was fatally defective because it failed to identify or prove the identity of the person or entity claiming ownership of the embezzled property; the trial court properly granted the State's motion to amend the indictment to name the "corporation" as the owner of the embezzled property as the matter was one of form, not of substance. Montgomery v. State, 891 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 2004).

Indictment, substantially in words of Code, alleging firm of which accused was partner was agent of other partner to handle his money to buy cotton, and that accused by reason of employment as such agent of other partner had in his control $2,400 of other partner and, prior to a named date in a named county, without consent of owner, embezzled and converted money to accused's use, and fraudulently and feloniously concealed same, held not demurrable as vague and indefinite. State v. Coltharp, 176 Miss. 883, 170 So. 285 (1936).

Indictment charging bank clerk had bank's money in his possession and embezzled same, not demurrable. Davis v.

State, 108 Miss. 710, 67 So. 178 (1915), error overruled, 67 So. 662 (Miss. 1915).

Indictment charging embezzlement and conversion of reel of films held sufficient. State v. Journey, 105 Miss. 516, 62 So. 354 (1913).

Indictment must set out extrinsic facts necessary with writing to constitute forgery. Griffin v. State, 96 Miss. 309, 51 So. 466 (1909); State v. Chapman, 103 Miss. 658, 60 So. 722 (1913).

No distinction between words "care" and "possession" and use of either sufficient in indictment for embezzlement. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

Indictment not objectionable for failure to charge from whom the money under defendant's care was received. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

Indictment charging embezzlement by a bank cashier of money belonging to the bank, in the language of the statute, was sufficient. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

Form of indictment. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

3. Defenses.

Restitution of money converted does not preclude conviction for embezzlement. Sherman v. State, 234 Miss. 775, 108 So. 2d 205 (1959).

Agent's right to a commission out of the money collected does not prevent the conversion thereof to his own use from being embezzlement. Sherman v. State, 234 Miss. 775, 108 So. 2d 205 (1959).

In prosecution of bank cashier for embezzlement of $500.00 held to be no defense that he afterwards deposited $504.00 in view of the fact that his account was overdrawn. Richberger v. State, 90 Miss. 806, 44 So. 772 (1907).

4. Election between charges.

In prosecution for embezzlement of $1,311.00 committed systematically at various times, action of district attorney securing instruction that defendant was guilty if he feloniously embezzled said money "to the amount of $25.00," was not an election to stand on one item. Davis v. State, 108 Miss. 710, 67 So. 178 (1915), error overruled, 67 So. 662 (Miss. 1915).

Motion to compel state to elect on which peculiar item it would ask a conviction was properly overruled. Davis v. State, 108 Miss. 710, 67 So. 178 (1915), error overruled, 67 So. 662 (Miss. 1915).

Where every act of embezzlement charged is proven, requiring state to elect on which act it would rely for conviction not reversible error. Starling v. State, 90 Miss. 255, 43 So. 952, 13 Am. Ann. Cas. 776 (1907).

State not required to elect on which act of embezzlement it will rely for conviction. Starling v. State, 90 Miss. 255, 43 So. 952, 13 Am. Ann. Cas. 776 (1907).

5. Proof.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's embezzlement conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 as it was reasonable for a jury to infer defendant converted funds to defendant's own use when the evidence showed defendant failed to account for and to pay over money defendant was responsible for depositing in the bank as a manager of three stores. Cummings v. State, 58 So. 3d 715 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

In a case in which defendant appealed her conviction for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19, she unsuccessfully argued that the verdict was not supported by the overwhelming weight of the evidence because too much weight was placed on the 86-year old victim's testimony and that the victim's testimony was riddled with inconsistencies and contradictions. The claim was an exaggeration not supported by the record. Barnes v. State, 30 So. 3d 313 (Miss. 2010).

Verdict finding defendant guilty of embezzlement was not contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence. Although the victim, who testified that she hired defendant to procure a truck for her from an automobile auction, repeatedly called defendant and attempted to meet defendant to pick up the truck, defendant never fulfilled his end of the agreement by procuring a truck for the victim, nor did defendant repay the victim any of the money entrusted to him as a down payment. Wilson v. State, 12 So. 3d 8 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 14 So. 3d 731, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 306 (Miss. 2009).

Lower court properly reversed a church deacon's embezzlement conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 as the statute required that the victim be either an incorporated company or a private person and the church was operating as an unincorporated religious society under Miss. Code Ann. § 79-11-31. Coleman v. State, 947 So. 2d 878 (Miss. 2006).

Evidence was insufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for embezzlement from a limited liability company because Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 did not apply to limited liability companies; it only applied to "incorporated companies" and "private persons." Champluvier v. State, 942 So. 2d 145 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant was properly convicted of embezzlement for converting casino money entrusted to him as a casino employee to his own personal use. Casino employees testified that defendant began his shift with $ 150,000 in his drawer; he left his station with six or seven bundles of one hundred dollar bills, he entered the restroom near his station with the money in a plastic bag, and a shortage of $ 80,000 was discovered when his cash drawer was subsequently opened. Bright v. State, 894 So. 2d 590 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 136 (Miss. 2005).

Driver for a customer (and an accomplice), testified to placing two $100 bills in defendant's pocket, and that defendant, a supervisor for the furniture company, then loaded the unauthorized furniture onto the driver's truck, and the evidence established that as the driver tried to leave, the security guard for the furniture company found the furniture was not properly tagged, and an officer then recovered $100 bills from defendant, consistent with the driver's story; consequently, there was evidence in the record that was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for embezzlement. Jones v. State, 872 So. 2d 53 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction where there was testimony that (1) the defendant took a lawnmower with permission from the victim for the purpose of repairing it, (2) approximately three to four days after he picked up the lawnmower, he pawned it for $150, and (3) the defendant only told the manager of the pawn shop that the lawnmower was not his after the police placed a hold on the lawnmower. Bishop v. State, 755 So. 2d 1269 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution of a plant manager indicted for embezzling about 300 shirts belonging to a named corporation, of which defendant was an agent, clerk, servant, or officer, wherein defendant contended that a corporation other than the one named in the indictment was the owner of the shirts and his employer, best evidence rule did not preclude use of witness testimony to establish the status of the corporation set forth in the indictment. Bunkley v. State, 495 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1986).

The prosecution failed to meet its burden of proof that an escrow agent embezzled funds from the escrow account where, even though the escrow agent drew two checks on the escrow account for the purchase of an automobile, the prosecution offered no proof for whom the automobile was purchased, no title certificate was introduced, and no testimony was presented that the automobile was purchased in defendant's name. Cowart v. State, 349 So. 2d 506 (Miss. 1977).

An agreement under which a service station business was the defendant's to be run as he saw fit, and the alleged victim of embezzlement would sell gasoline to the defendant at wholesale price, and the defendant would pay the alleged victim promptly each week when billed, created merely a debtor-creditor relationship rather than an agency, and the defendant who failed to make good on 3 checks made in payment of petroleum products sold to him by the alleged embezzlement victim, but returned because of insufficient funds, was not guilty of embezzlement, the element of agency or fiduciary relationship not having been established. Fairchild v. State, 258 So. 2d 254 (Miss. 1972).

In a prosecution for embezzlement from a partnership testimony of defendant's wife as to a statement made in her presence to the defendant by the wife of one of the partners to the effect that they were fixing to frame the defendant was properly excluded as hearsay and was incompetent without the partner's consenting thereto. Barry v. State, 187 Miss. 221, 192 So. 841 (1940).

Permitting the wife of a partner in a prosecution for embezzlement of funds of the partnership by the defendant employed as a salesman of such partnership to contradict defendant's proffered evidence that the wife made a statement that they were fixing to frame the defendant, which evidence itself was excluded as hearsay, was highly prejudicial, since it is not permissible to contradict a witness about an immaterial matter. Barry v. State, 187 Miss. 221, 192 So. 841 (1940).

It was reversible error in a prosecution of a salesman for embezzlement of the funds of his employer, a partnership, to exclude the testimony of its customers to the effect that after defendant's alleged embezzlement, a representative of the partnership presented statements to such witnesses, that they informed the representatives that they had paid their bills by check, and that upon rechecking the representatives admitted that their bills had been paid. Barry v. State, 187 Miss. 221, 192 So. 841 (1940).

Fiduciary relation must be proved. Lawson v. State, 125 Miss. 754, 88 So. 325 (1921).

Conviction cannot be sustained, where no conversion was shown. Bell v. State, 110 Miss. 430, 70 So. 456 (1916).

Cashier could not be convicted of embezzling funds in joint custody of himself and another in absence of evidence that he was the one who misappropriated them. Clark v. State, 109 Miss. 737, 69 So. 497 (1915).

Evidence of the de facto existence of bank and performance of its function as such constituted sufficient proof of its corporate existence. Davis v. State, 108 Miss. 710, 67 So. 178 (1915), error overruled, 67 So. 662 (Miss. 1915).

Indictment for embezzling funds belonging to corporation not sustained by proof that the funds belonged to a partnership. Hampton v. State, 99 Miss. 176, 54 So. 722 (1911).

Defendants not guilty of embezzlement, where it was not shown they collected premiums they were alleged to have embezzled. State v. Russell, 98 Miss. 64, 53 So. 954 (1911).

6. Instructions.

In her embezzlement trial, defendant's proffered instruction stated, in part, that good character could in itself be sufficient to generate in the jurors' minds reasonable doubt as to the guilt of defendant so as to require an acquittal, although without it the other evidence would be convincing of guilt. The instruction would have been an improper comment upon the weight of the testimony and the trial court did not err when it refused same. Montgomery v. State, 891 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 2004).

Instructions in a prosecution of a salesman for embezzlement of the funds collected on behalf of a partnership by whom he was employed to the effect that the jury might convict him if they found beyond a reasonable doubt that he had embezzled all or any part, exceeding $25, of the funds alleged to have been embezzled, were erroneous and prejudicial, in that such instructions would permit the individual insurers to find him guilty of embezzlement of any one of numerous items without there being a unanimous agreement as to any one particular item. Barry v. State, 187 Miss. 221, 192 So. 841 (1940).

A requested instruction that even if the jury should find that the books and accounts of the partnership, whose funds defendant was alleged to have embezzled, showed less credit to the account of its customers than were actually paid to the defendant, the jury could not convict the defendant unless it believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant himself embezzled money belonging to the partnership, should have been given. Barry v. State, 187 Miss. 221, 192 So. 841 (1940).

Instruction that jury should try case on evidence and not on statement of attorney, if error, was harmless. Davis v. State, 108 Miss. 710, 67 So. 178 (1915), error overruled, 67 So. 662 (Miss. 1915).

Instruction that a mere failure on defendant's part without explanation, to turn over to the express company the funds in his hands belonging to it, established guilt, was erroneous. Hampton v. State, 99 Miss. 176, 54 So. 722 (1911).

7. Sentencing.

In an embezzlement case, a trial court erred in sentencing defendants because defendants' conduct could clearly fall under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-25 or Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19; the conduct was required to be treated as leniently as possible because a lesser punishment applied. Salts v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 513 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 7, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 984 So. 2d 1050, 2008 Miss. App. LEXIS 199 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where defendant was convicted of embezzling $ 80,000 from the casino where he worked, his sentence of 10 years was within the statutory range. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in sentencing defendant. Bright v. State, 894 So. 2d 590 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 893 So. 2d 1061, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 136 (Miss. 2005).

8. Motion for directed verdict.

State failed to prove the elements of embezzlement in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19 beyond a reasonable doubt and thus the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict; in order to prove embezzlement, the State had to provide evidence of the following: (1) a company owned the car in question, (2) the car was lawfully entrusted to defendant, and (3) defendant wrongfully converted the vehicle to his own use, and while the State established car ownership by the company given the vehicle identification number, the State did not prove that defendant was entrusted with the vehicle, given that (1) defendant did not have permission to take company vehicle off the lot just by being an employee of the company, (2) the car belonged to a different location where defendant was never employed, and (3) defendant did not possess a valid driver's license, which prohibited him from lawfully driving company vehicles as part of his job. At best, the evidence might have shown the actual theft of property, but it did not prove embezzlement, and the court reversed and rendered. Luckett v. State, 989 So. 2d 995 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court erred by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict as there was insufficient evidence to find that defendant had embezzled funds from the church deacon under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19; the deacon had no ownership rights in any portion of the embezzled funds and defendant should have been charged with larceny under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-4. Coleman v. State, 947 So. 2d 964 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), affirmed by 947 So. 2d 878, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 681 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not commit reversible error in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict and motion for a new trial on the ground that the offense she allegedly committed constituted larceny and not embezzlement. Defendant, who the evidence showed took $15,000 from her employer by writing duplicate checks and depositing some checks in her own account, was in charge of running the day-to-day operations, she was the office manager and record keeper and was entrusted to write checks on behalf of the employer, make deposits and reconcile the bank statements; it was a classic case of embezzlement, Montgomery v. State, 891 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 2004).

1. In general.

Defendant failed to notify a business that rented defendant of goods of two changes of address, in violation of the rental agreement; a jury could infer that defendant formed the requisite intent to embezzle by contract after defendant's girlfriend destroyed the goods, and defendant moved, leaving no forwarding address despite the girlfriend's indication that she wanted to pay for the goods. Crump v. State, 962 So. 2d 154 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that: (1) a fiduciary relationship existed between defendant (a car salesman), and the dealership; (2) money was paid by a customer to defendant in the context of that fiduciary relationship; and (3) defendant converted said monies to his own use. Further, although it was not an action in contract, the jury could have reasonably determined that a contract existed under § 75-2-201 and that defendant was obligated to deliver the subject down payment to the dealership; therefore, the trial court was correct in denying defendant's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and request for a peremptory instruction. Bell v. State, 910 So. 2d 640 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Person who retains possession of rental automobile obtained through use of false name on rental agreement may be convicted of embezzlement. Ruffin v. State, 482 So. 2d 231 (Miss. 1986).

Where the defendant received money pursuant to a contract under which he was required to build a home for two individuals, the money received by the defendant belonged to him, and notwithstanding his failure to complete the construction of the home he could not be properly indicted and convicted for embezzlement under section 97-23-25. Shelley v. State, 447 So. 2d 124 (Miss. 1984).

In a prosecution charging an insurance agent with embezzling money given him in trust for the purpose of securing fire insurance on a dwelling, it was reversible error to admit evidence that defendant's co-employee had used a postage meter to backdate an envelope addressed to the company from which the fire insurance was sought where the indictment did not charge a conspiracy and there was no proof thereof; the backdating was not done in the presence of the agent and there was no testimony or evidence to show that the backdating was done at defendant's direction or that he had knowledge of the act. McBride v. State, 366 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1979).

Even though the sentence under this section was suspended, once the court elected to sentence the defendant to imprisonment in the state penitentiary, it could not under the guise of a condition of the suspension impose the additional sentence of paying a $1,000 fine. Bass v. State, 328 So. 2d 665 (Miss. 1976).

When the words "any person" at the beginning of this section [Code 1942

§ 2118] are considered in relation to the remainder of the words of the section, it is apparent from the entirety that the type of possession referred to is none other than a trust, and it necessarily follows that a trust or fiduciary relationship must be embodied in the charge of the indictment. Grantham v. State, 284 So. 2d 523 (Miss. 1973).

That a cattle purchaser had taken cattle purchased from the premises of the seller without paying for them as allegedly required by the contract, the purchaser testifying that he was buying on an open account as he had done in the past, totally failed to prove a wrongful conversion or appropriation of another's property lawfully possessed by the defendant, but proved only that the defendant forced his credit upon the association, not commendable perhaps, but nevertheless not constituting the crime of embezzlement. Grantham v. State, 284 So. 2d 523 (Miss. 1973).

2. Indictment, generally.

Defendant was not properly indicted and convicted under this section, and his conviction of embezzlement under that section would be reversed, where he and the alleged victims entered into a clearly written and executed contract for the construction of a house, where the victims, who were intelligent people as evidenced by their employment, freely gave their money completely to defendant in four different installments even though no work on the house was in progress after the second installment, and where the money belonged to defendant once he received it even though he did not produce the proceeds, in that those proceeds were for the completion of the house under the civil contract. Shelley v. State, 447 So. 2d 124 (Miss. 1984).

An indictment for the crime of embezzlement must contain the words of the statute or use their equivalent. Grantham v. State, 284 So. 2d 523 (Miss. 1973).

In prosecution for embezzlement of quantity of beer, the indictment was good in that it sufficiently described the contract under which defendant obtained delivery of beer, and it sufficiently informed the accused of the nature of the accusation and the description of the property was sufficient and it sufficiently informed the accused of acts made unlawful by statute with which he was charged. Davis v. State, 228 Miss. 441, 87 So. 2d 900 (1956), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 981, 77 S. Ct. 381, 1 L. Ed. 2d 365 (1957).

Indictment for embezzlement does not have to set forth evidence, but only enough to inform defendant sufficiently of charge therein laid against him. State v. May, 208 Miss. 862, 45 So. 2d 728 (1950).

3. —Incorrect date or failure to state date.

Indictment for embezzlement under this section [Code 1942, § 2118], is not invalid because it charges that the alleged crime was committed on certain date and indictment was returned on that same date in view of Code 1942, § 2451, specifically providing that where time is not of essence of offense stating of time imperfectly will not make indictment insufficient. State v. May, 208 Miss. 862, 45 So. 2d 728 (1950).

Indictment for embezzlement of money received on sale of automobile by agent of seller is not demurrable for failure to state date of alleged sale by agent or name of person to whom automobile was alleged to have been sold. State v. May, 208 Miss. 862, 45 So. 2d 728 (1950).

4. Admissibility of Evidence.

Defendant, tried for embezzlement, was employed by the owner for approximately nine months and the owner testified that he had become familiar with defendant's handwriting during said period. By virtue of his familiarity with defendant's handwriting, the owner was fully qualified to offer his opinion as to whether or not the writing was in fact defendant's signature; such testimony was rationally based upon his perception, was helpful in making a determination of a fact in issue, was not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Miss. R. Evid. 702, and it therefore met the requirements for both Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 901(b)(2). Bell v. State, 910 So. 2d 640 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

5. Sentencing.

In an embezzlement case, a trial court erred in sentencing defendants because defendants' conduct could clearly fall under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-25 or Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-19; the conduct was required to be treated as leniently as possible because a lesser punishment applied. Salts v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 513 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 7, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 984 So. 2d 1050, 2008 Miss. App. LEXIS 199 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

6. Jury instructions.

Court properly refused to instruct the jury that specific intent to defraud was required to prove embezzlement because the jury instruction stated that defendants were charged with embezzlement, and the jury should find defendants guilty if it found beyond a reasonable doubt that they had "fraudulently appropriated" various sums of money. Even without a separate definition, that language necessarily implied that defendants had intentionally defrauded the victims. Salts v. State, 984 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 334 (Miss. 2008).

This section [Code 1942, § 2129] is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. State v. Hurdle, 113 Miss. 736, 74 So. 681 (1917).

Statute [Code 1942, § 2129] is highly penal, and the plaintiff, to recover, must be without fault. Mahoney v. McNeil, 77 Miss. 406, 27 So. 528 (1900).

At common law if any person hired or retained another's servant, that other had an action for damages against both the hirer or retainer and the servant. This statute enforces this common-law right. Hoole v. Dorroh, 75 Miss. 257, 22 So. 829 (1897).

This statute [Code 1942, § 2129] is not class legislation. Hoole v. Dorroh, 75 Miss. 257, 22 So. 829 (1897).

2. Affidavit.

An affidavit alleging the enticing away and employment of a person who had contracted with another, charges no offense, where it omits to state that the person enticed away was a laborer, or that the matter complained of was without the consent of the employer. Jackson v. State, 13 So. 935 (Miss. 1893).

3. Venue of prosecution.

4. When statute violated.

Understanding that former employer had released employee held insufficient, within law requiring employer's consent in writing before another can employ. Armstrong v. Bishop, 151 Miss. 353, 117 So. 512 (1928).

In determining status of person under contract to make a crop, date of expiration of contract is implied as that necessary to make a crop. Armstrong v. Bishop, 151 Miss. 353, 117 So. 512 (1928).

Where one who was defendant's tenant in 1905 contracted with plaintiff to work land for him in 1906, but never went on the land and refused to perform his contract, and defendant did nothing to prevent him, defendant not become liable by permitting the tenant to occupy another piece of land in the spring of 1906. Alford v. Pegues, 92 Miss. 558, 46 So. 76 (1908).

Where defendant rented land to one without knowing that he was plaintiff's renter, and upon being so informed tried to get the renter to go back to plaintiff, defendant is not liable. Sneed v. Gilman, 44 So. 830 (Miss. 1907).

Where the servant was arrested and agreed to return to his employer if the case was dismissed and then was seized and carried off by defendant, a conviction was proper. Gregory v. State, 42 So. 168 (Miss. 1906).

Failure of landlord to furnish tenant meat and clothing insufficient to justify tenant in abandoning his lease, unless landlord under legal obligation to do so, and defendant employing him knowing of lease, was liable. Petty v. Leggett, 38 So. 549 (Miss. 1905).

Prior to the addition of the last sentence of the above section [Code 1942, § 2129], it was held that enticing away of an infant servant whose mother had made a contract for her services to another for a year is not an offense. State v. Richardson, 86 Miss. 439, 38 So. 497 (1905).

This section [Code 1942, § 2129] is not violated by a tenant who merely obtains advances from his landlord on pretense of going to certain places on business, and who leaves the premises and does not return. Ex parte Harris, 85 Miss. 4, 37 So. 505 (1904).

Under this section [Code 1942, § 2129] one cannot be convicted who has never actually entered upon the service, or gone upon the farm of his alleged employer. Hendricks v. State, 79 Miss. 368, 30 So. 708 (1901).

A laborer who has contracted in writing to work on shares who has never actually entered upon the service cannot be convicted under § 1068, Code of 1892, even as amended by the laws of 1900 (p. 140) (Code 1906, § 1146). Hendricks v. State, 79 Miss. 368, 30 So. 708 (1901).

Chatters*, 71 Miss. 509, 15 So. 39 (1894).

5. —Contracting with one who has abandoned former relation.

Laws 1928, ch. 292 has no application to employment of tenant theretofore abandoning contract. Hill v. Duckworth, 155 Miss. 484, 124 So. 641 (1929).

Third person may lawfully employ laborer or renter theretofore breaching contract without incurring liability to original landlord. Hill v. Duckworth, 155 Miss. 484, 124 So. 641 (1929).

Conviction cannot be had for enticing away, or employing laborer or renter already having abandoned his contract; evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction. Waldrup v. State, 154 Miss. 646, 122 So. 771 (1929).

Negro woman negotiating with another before harvesting crops had not left employment within law forbidding interference therewith. Armstrong v. Bishop, 151 Miss. 353, 117 So. 512 (1928).

Abandonment by a laborer of former contract authorizes re-employment by another. Thompson v. Box, 147 Miss. 1, 112 So. 597 (1927).

Person contracting with laborers, believing they had abandoned original contract, held not liable for statutory penalty. Thompson v. Box, 147 Miss. 1, 112 So. 597 (1927).

Mere hiring of tenant who has broken his contract not a violation of this section [Code 1942, § 2129]. Evans v. State, 121 Miss. 252, 83 So. 167 (1919).

Laws of 1900, ch. 102, does not compel a renter to fulfill the contract, except by penalties for abandonment, nor prevent him from leasing land from another. Sneed v. Gilman, 44 So. 830 (Miss. 1907).

Whether the cause for which the tenant abandoned the premises was sufficient was a question of law, and not a question of fact for the jury. Petty v. Leggett, 38 So. 549 (Miss. 1905).

The mere employment of a servant after he had left his former master is not sufficient to sustain a conviction under the statute. Jackson v. State, 16 So. 299 (Miss. 1894).

6. Actions for damages.

An action to recover damages for inducing an automobile dealership to violate the terms of its premises lease, although erroneously brought under this section, which was enacted to protect the farmer-sharecropper relationship, was nevertheless proper since the declaration set out sufficient allegations to charge a common law cause of action based on willfull interference with contract; however, an award of punitive damages was improper, since only compensatory damages are authorized by this section and since the parties had confined recovery to that permitted hereunder. Cranford v. Shelton, 378 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 1980).

Right of the landlord to sue for damages not dependent on conviction of the crime of enticing away. Wheeler v. Pannell, 96 Miss. 382, 51 So. 598 (1910).

Landlord suing one for enticing away his tenant for advances made tenant on faith of the contract, may not recover from advances made to the tenant for completion of the crop under a prior contract of letting. Wheeler v. Pannell, 96 Miss. 382, 51 So. 598 (1910).

The laws of 1900 (p. 140) repealed the double damages allowed by this section [Code 1942, § 2129] under the operation of § 61 of the Constitution of 1890. Nations v. Lovejoy, 80 Miss. 401, 31 So. 811 (1902).

A plaintiff in a suit under § 1068, Code 1892, could not recover double damages when, pending his suit, another statute (Laws 1900, p. 140) had limited his recovery to a less amount. Nations v. Lovejoy, 80 Miss. 401, 31 So. 811 (1902).

Plaintiff suing under this statute must show damages. Hoole v. Dorroh, 75 Miss. 257, 22 So. 829 (1897).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Mississippi statutory scheme pertaining to insurance carriers and agents, embodies in §§ 83-5-7, 83-17-103[Repealed], 83-17-105[Repealed], and 97-23-31, allegedly violated by defendants, met 3 criteria for laws to regulate "business of insurance," being (1) whether practice has effect of transferring or spreading a policy holder's risk, (2) whether practice is an integral part of policy relationship between insurer and insured, and (3) whether practice is limited to entities within insurance industry; therefore there was possibility of a valid state law claim based on Mississippi insurance regulatory statutes and/or fraud in the inducement against one of defendants who was insurance agent; accordingly, defendant was not nominal or fraudulently joined party for purposes of removal jurisdiction. Smith v. Arkansas Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 781 F. Supp. 1159 (N.D. Miss. 1991).

One transmitting application, receiving and delivering policy, and collecting and transmitting premium to a broker was an agent within statute, though not authorized to solicit business. Cain v. State, 103 Miss. 701, 60 So. 731 (1913).

Indictment charging defendant "did unlawfully assume to act as an insurance agent" was fatally defective for failure to specify particular unlawful act charged. Fikes v. State, 87 Miss. 251, 39 So. 783 (1906).

Testimony of state insurance commissioner and certified copy of records of his office was competent and conclusive on question of whether company for which defendant was soliciting insurance had been permitted to do business in state. Fikes v. State, 87 Miss. 251, 39 So. 783 (1906).

The statute is valid and not in conflict with either the state or federal Constitution. Moses v. State, 65 Miss. 56, 3 So. 140 (1887).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Professions within statute.
3. Indictment.

1. In general.

A statute of this sort does not contravene U. S. Const., amend. 14, but is within the police power of the state. State v. Tucker, 102 Miss. 517, 59 So. 826 (1912).

2. Professions within statute.

A chancery clerk who, through the exercise of discretion and the use of her own knowledge and judgment, drew deeds, deeds of trust, bills of sale, and title certificates to real property was not a mere scrivener but was engaged in the unlawful practice of law, and an injunction was properly granted to restrain her from continuing these activities. Darby v. Mississippi State Bd. of Bar Admissions, 185 So. 2d 684 (Miss. 1966).

The element of compensation for legal services performed by one not licensed to practice law may be a factor in determining whether specified conduct is unlawful, but it is not controlling, and the character of the service and its relation to the public interest determines its classification, not whether compensation is charged. Darby v. Mississippi State Bd. of Bar Admissions, 185 So. 2d 684 (Miss. 1966).

The prohibition against others than members of the bar of the State of Mississippi from engaging in the practice of law is not for the protection of the lawyer against lay competition, but is for the protection of the public. Darby v. Mississippi State Bd. of Bar Admissions, 185 So. 2d 684 (Miss. 1966).

A chiropractor, who, for compensation injected into the body of patients by the use of hypodermic needles vitamins or penicillin for the cure, relief or palliations of the ailments of which the patients were complaining, came within the statutory definition of practicing medicine. Harris v. State, 229 Miss. 755, 92 So. 2d 217 (1957).

Sustaining a conviction of a chiropractor, who, for compensation, injected into the body of patients by the use of hypodermic needles vitamins or penicillin for the cure, relief, or palliation of the patient's ailments, of practicing medicine without a license, would not so construe this section [Code 1942, § 2332] and Code 1942, § 8888, as to render them in violation of the constitutional right of a citizen to liberty and pursuit of happiness, or to constitute a restriction upon the right of private contract. Harris v. State, 229 Miss. 755, 92 So. 2d 217 (1957).

Under statute defining practice of medicine, "medicine" need not be drug used in pharmacopoeia or by druggist and physicians, so long as it is a healing agency, sold for profit. Joyner v. State, 181 Miss. 245, 179 So. 573, 115 A.L.R. 954 (1938).

Whether liquid used by chiropractor on patient's throat preparatory to inserting needle for application of electricity to diseased tonsils, was medicine or anaesthetic instead of mineral water, held for jury. Joyner v. State, 181 Miss. 245, 179 So. 573, 115 A.L.R. 954 (1938).

Offense of practicing medicine without license is not committed by failure to file license in time to prevent it becoming void under a statute [Code 1942, § 8884] avoiding it unless recorded in 60 days from the date of issuance. Grady v. State, 144 Miss. 100, 109 So. 728 (1926).

An osteopath is not within this section [Code 1942, § 2332] nor the Act 1896 (Laws 1896, p. 79; Code 1906, § 3691). Hayden v. State, 81 Miss. 291, 33 So. 653, 95 Am. St. R. 471 (1903).

Professional services by a physician who has no license come under this section [Code 1942, § 2332]. Bohn v. Lowry, 77 Miss. 424, 27 So. 604 (1900).

3. Indictment.

Indictment charging defendant "did unlawfully practice as a physician...and did not then and there have a license to do so," is sufficient. State v. Tucker, 102 Miss. 517, 59 So. 826 (1912).

(a) Upon a first shoplifting conviction the defendant shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or punished by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six (6) months, or by both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00).

(b) Upon a second shoplifting conviction the defendant shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a term not to exceed six (6) months, or by both if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons why the offender cannot be safely and effectively supervised in the community, is not amenable to community-based treatment, or poses a significant risk to public safety. If such a finding is not made, the court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment and impose a period of probation not exceeding one (1) year or a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or both.

(6) Upon a third or subsequent shoplifting conviction where the value of the shoplifted merchandise is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or greater than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), the defendant shall be guilty of a felony and fined not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or imprisoned for a term not exceeding three (3) years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(7) A person convicted of shoplifting merchandise for which the merchant's stated price exceeds One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, punished as provided in Section 97-17-41 for the offense of grand larceny.

(8) In determining the number of prior shoplifting convictions for purposes of imposing punishment under this section, the court shall disregard all such convictions occurring more than seven (7) years prior to the shoplifting offense in question.

(9) For the purpose of determining the gravity of the offense under subsection (7) of this section, the prosecutor may aggregate the value of merchandise shoplifted from three (3) or more separate mercantile establishments within the same legal jurisdiction over a period of thirty (30) or fewer days.

Amendment Notes — The 2014 amendment, in (5) and (7), substituted “One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00)” for “Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00)”; in (5)(a) and (5)(b), inserted “in the county jail” following “or punished by imprisonment,” and substituted “if the court finds substantial and compelling reasons ... or poses a significant risk to public safety” for “such fine and imprisonment” at the end of the first sentence and added the second sentence; in (6), inserted “where the value of the shoplifted merchandise is not less than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or greater than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00),” and substituted “One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00)” for “Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00)” and “three (3)” for “five (5)”; and made minor stylistic changes.

I. UNDER CURRENT LAW.

1. In general.

After a jury convicted appellant of felony shoplifting, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(1), a trial court did not err in denying appellant's post-trial motions for a new trial, or in the alternative, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because appellant admitted to taking cigars from behind a store counter with the intent to steal the cigars and resell them later, and as such, appellant completed the crime of shoplifting at the moment he took possession of the cigars with the intent to take the cigars without paying for them, and whether he left the premises with the cigars was irrelevant. Newson v. State, 107 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

Defendant was properly convicted as a felony shoplifter based upon Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93 as it existed on November 4, 2002. Wilson v. State, 967 So. 2d 32 (Miss. 2007).

As defendant was properly convicted of felony shoplifting in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93, defendant's five year sentence pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41 was proper as it did not exceed the statutory maximum. Watson v. State, 939 So. 2d 806 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 592 (Miss. 2006).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93 based on two prior misdemeanor shoplifting offenses because the prior misdemeanors were elements of felony charge and had to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and defendant failed to rebut the presumption of validity that attached to abstracts of convictions by presenting evidence to show there was an irregularity in the abstracts. Biggs v. State, 942 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 715 (Miss. 2006).

To convict for felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93 (6), (8), the State was required to prove as part of its case-in-chief and as an element of the charge, that defendant had twice previously been convicted of shoplifting within seven years. No such proof was offered, and while defendant testified on cross-examination that she had been convicted of shoplifting in 1999, there was no testimony or evidence that she had been convicted twice of shoplifting within seven years prior to the offense charged, nor was the jury instructed as to this; although defendant never moved for a directed verdict on the latter ground, nor did she raise it on appeal; reviewing the matter as plain error, the appellate court held that reversal on the felony shoplifting charge was warranted, but that entry of conviction for the second shoplifting offense was in order. Evans v. State, 919 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Sufficient evidence existed to convict defendant of felony shoplifting as a store employee gave the opinion that defendant was the individual depicted in a videotape seen stealing cartons of cigarettes, the jury was also able to watch the videotape, and defendant had previously twice been convicted of shoplifting. Ratliff v. State, 879 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Evidence was sufficient to find defendant guilty of conspiracy to commit and committing felony shoplifting; the evidence presented by the State included testimony from several officers regarding the events after the shoplifting at one of the stores, including an in-court identification of defendant as the driver of the maroon car used, and any conflicts in the testimony of witness was resolved by the jury. Richardson v. State, 868 So. 2d 389 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for felony shoplifting was proper where credible evidence was presented supporting an inference that defendant did take possession of the merchandise in question, steaks, with the intention of converting them to his own use without paying for them. Sykes v. State, 846 So. 2d 307 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The evidence was insufficient to support a shoplifting conviction where the defendant was in the same store with the co-defendant during the shoplifting episode involving the co-defendant and the defendant rode away from the store in a car driven by the co-defendant at a high rate of speed, but there was no evidence that the defendant knew that the shoplifting episode was taking place or that it was planned. Lewis v. State, 573 So. 2d 719 (Miss. 1990).

2. Subsequent offenses.

State inmate convicted of third-offense felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann.

§ 97-23-93(6) and sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole was granted habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 based on a fundamental miscarriage of justice because the facts presented at sentencing did not establish that the inmate had actually served one year in prison for a prior felony conviction, an essential element to prove habitual offender status under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83. Sumrell v. Mississippi, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30798 (N.D. Miss. Apr. 9, 2009), opinion withdrawn by 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39162 (N.D. Miss. May 8, 2009).

Defendant's conviction of felony shoplifting and five-year sentence without parole as a habitual offender was affirmed where the appellate court found no merit in his arguments that the indictment was defective and that the jurors' handwritten verdict was ambiguous; nothing in the language of the shoplifting statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93, nor in this habitual offender statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, prevented conviction of a third felony shoplifting from having the normal maximum sentencing rules apply. Taylor v. State, 838 So. 2d 339 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), writ of certiorari denied by 837 So. 2d 771, 2003 Miss. App. LEXIS 175 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where a defendant was found to have violated the terms and conditions of his probation, the court had the power to impose any sentence that would have been originally imposed. Brunson v. State, 796 So. 2d 284 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

An indictment for felony shoplifting was not fatally flawed for failing to enumerate the defendant's prior shoplifting convictions; the clear language of the statute designates a third or subsequent shoplifting conviction as a felony, and the statute does not require successive convictions to receive a numerical designation before a felony may be charged. Moore v. State, 781 So. 2d 159 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Trial court did not err in sentencing the defendant under the more severe penalties for shoplifting, third offense, despite the fact that the jury was not permitted to pass on the question of fact as to whether defendant actually had two prior shoplifting convictions; prior to commencement of his trial, the defendant successfully moved to prohibit the state from making any reference to his prior convictions because of the harmful prejudicial nature of such information and had successfully moved for the determination of this aspect of the case by a post-verdict inquiry. Sellers v. State, 773 So. 2d 350 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

3. Computations.

Appellate court holds that for purposes of the computations required under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(8), relating to prior shoplifting convictions, the date of the "offense" is the date of the occurrence giving rise to the current charge rather than the date that it is finally adjudicated that the criminal activity actually occurred. Bufkin v. State, 867 So. 2d 285 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

4. Evidence.

Inmate waived any argument as to any possible evidentiary defects in his indictment charging him as a habitual offender for felony shoplifting pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(7) because by entering his guilty plea, the inmate fully admitted to the circuit court that he was guilty of shoplifting merchandise with a value greater than $ 500, and that testimony was sufficient to constitute felony shoplifting under § 97-23-93(7), Phillips v. State, 25 So. 3d 404 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Felony shoplifting is somewhat akin to felony driving under the influence (DUI) in that both rely on multiple prior convictions for the same offending conduct to raise the level of offense from a misdemeanor to a felony, and the Mississippi Supreme Court plainly states that, in the matter of DUI offenses, the prior convictions are elements of the crime that must be determined by the finder of fact beyond reasonable doubt as a part of the prosecution's case in chief. Thus, the trial court properly dealt with the problems arising under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) by instructing the jury that it could not consider evidence of defendant's prior shoplifting convictions as evidence of defendant's guilt in the instant case. Bufkin v. State, 867 So. 2d 285 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

5. Indictments.

Inmate waived any argument as to any possible evidentiary defects in his indictment charging him as a habitual offender for felony shoplifting pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(7) because by entering his guilty plea, the inmate fully admitted to the circuit court that he was guilty of shoplifting merchandise with a value greater than $ 500, and that testimony was sufficient to constitute felony shoplifting under § 97-23-93(7), Phillips v. State, 25 So. 3d 404 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant maintained that the indictment was insufficient because it omitted the allegation that she had concealed the merchandise and it failed to fully notify her of the nature and the cause of the offense charged. However, the indictment sufficiently informed her that she was charged with taking the steaks with the intent of converting them to her own use without paying for them; moreover, her defense was that she had not concealed the steaks but only had them under her arm and, it was apparently clear to her that the State was relying upon the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(2)(a) (presumptive intent). Evans v. State, 919 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

6. Sentence.

Imposition of a five-year sentence after appellant was convicted of felony shoplifting, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(1), was not disproportionate because appellant had two prior felony convictions, establishing his status as a habitual offender, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, and two prior shoplifting convictions, establishing his status as a third shoplifting offender, and the five-year sentence was within the maximum term allowed by § 97-23-93(6). Newson v. State, 107 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. Ct. App. 2013).

In a case in which defendant had been sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment as a habitual offender after violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93, defendant unsuccessfully argued that she should not have been charged as a habitual offender as the sentences for her two previous convictions were served concurrently. The two prior felonies were separate incidents, which occurred at different times, and each carried a sentence of at least one year; the fact that she was only incarcerated for one year while serving her concurrent sentences did not afford her relief from habitual offender status under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81. Williams v. State, 24 So. 3d 360 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a case in which defendant had been sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment as a habitual offender after violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93, defendant unsuccessfully argued that her sentence was unconstitutional as it exceeded the maximum sentence allowed by law. As she was a habitual offender, the circuit court was required under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 to impose the maximum sentence for grand larceny, which, under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-41, was 10 years and a fine of $ 10,000. Williams v. State, 24 So. 3d 360 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

11. In general.

Manager clearly believed that while the customer's partner pilfered sausages by placing them in her purse, the customer acted as a decoy to distract watchful employees, and when the manager then requested that the customer and his partner accompany him to resolve the issue, the customer became belligerent, escorted his partner to his car, and drove away. Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the customer, it was clear that a fair-minded jury could not have concluded that the grocery store and its manager pursued criminal proceedings without probable cause or that the grocery store and its manager acted with malice; thus, summary judgment for the grocery store and its manager upon the customer's suit for malicious prosecution was proper. Williams v. Jitney Jungle, Inc., 910 So. 2d 39 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

State trial court's refusal of defendant's lesser-included-offense instruction did not violate any of his federal constitutional rights where instructions on lesser included offense could properly be denied under standard that satisfies due process. Reddix v. Thigpen, 805 F.2d 506 (5th Cir. 1986).

(2)(a) A person commits unlawful distribution of a theft detection shielding device when he or she knowingly manufactures, sells, offers to sell or distributes any theft detection shielding device.

(b) A person commits unlawful possession of a theft detection shielding device when he or she knowingly possesses any theft detection shielding device with the intent to commit larceny or shoplifting.

(c) A person commits unlawful possession of a theft detection device remover when he or she knowingly possesses any theft detection device remover with the intent to use such tool to remove any theft detection device from any merchandise without the permission of the merchant or person owning or holding said merchandise.

(d) A person commits unlawful use of a theft detection shielding device or a theft detection device remover when he or she uses or attempts to use either device while committing a violation of Section 97-23-93, Mississippi Code of 1972.

(4)(a) The activation of an anti-shoplifting or inventory control device as a result of a person exiting the establishment or a protected area within the establishment shall constitute reasonable cause for the detention of the person so exiting by the owner or operator of the establishment or by an agent or employee of the owner or operator, provided notice has been posted to advise patrons that such a device is being utilized. Each such detention shall be made only in a reasonable manner and only for a reasonable period of time sufficient for any inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the activation of the device or for the recovery of goods.

(b) The taking into custody and detention by a law enforcement officer, merchant or merchant's employee, if in compliance with the requirements of this section, does not render such law enforcement officer, merchant or merchant's employee criminally or civilly liable for false arrest, false

2. Burden of proof.
3. Application.
4. Instructions to jury.
- 5.-10. [Reserved for future use.]
11. Under former § 97-23-51.

1. In general.

Two elements must be shown in order for a store owner to claim the qualified immunity afforded under the statute: first, there must be proof of a good faith basis and probable cause based upon reasonable grounds to detain and question the customer; and second, there must be proof that the detention and questioning of the customer was done in a reasonable manner. Turner v. Hudson Salvage, Inc., 709 So. 2d 425 (Miss. 1998).

Mississippi statute governing qualified immunity of merchants from liability for malicious prosecution of suspected shoplifters protected only questioning for purpose of ascertaining whether plaintiff shoplifted; any other actions by store owner, including insistence of plaintiff's arrest and filing of affidavit, would not fall within scope of qualified immunity. Lyon v. Fred's, Inc., 971 F. Supp. 239 (N.D. Miss. 1997), aff'd, 176 F.3d 478 (5th Cir. 1999).

2. Burden of proof.

The burden of proof rests upon the party asserting the privilege to show that probable cause existed to detain and question the suspected shoplifter; mere suspicion or conjecture does not meet the probable cause requirement. Turner v. Hudson Salvage, Inc., 709 So. 2d 425 (Miss. 1998).

3. Application.

Where a store employee watched as a store security guard detained and questioned the plaintiff on suspicion of shoplifting and yet failed to find out what the security guard discovered before he detained the plaintiff a second time, the defendant store exceeded the immunity provided under the statute. Turner v. Hudson Salvage, Inc., 709 So. 2d 425 (Miss. 1998).

4. Instructions to jury.

In a defamation action arising from an incident in which the plaintiff was asked by employees of the defendant to show his receipt for cigarettes after he left the defendant's store, the court properly instructed the jury with regard to the defendant's right to question customers upon suspicion of shoplifting. Davis v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 724 So. 2d 907 (Miss. 1998).

5.-10. [Reserved for future use.]

11. Under former § 97-23-51.

In an action against a store for defamation and slander following an accusation of shoplifting, refusal of the trial court to define in its charge to the jury "probable cause," "reasonable grounds," "reasonable manner," or "good faith," constituted reversible error, since former § 97-23-51 protected the defendant store from liability, if all those elements were present, and the defendant store raised each of them as an affirmative defense. McWilliams v. Watkins, 430 So. 2d 854 (Miss. 1983).

Former § 97-23-51, authorizing a merchant to detain a suspect for questioning, protects the merchant from civil liability for stopping, detaining momentarily, and questioning a suspect in a reasonable manner to determine if he is guilty of shoplifting, but not from subsequent institution of criminal proceedings. Owens v. Kroger Co., 430 So. 2d 843 (Miss. 1983).

In a damage action against a store by a customer who had been falsely accused of shoplifting, the trial court committed reversible error in directing a verdict in favor of the store, where there was conflicting evidence as to whether the store manager had acted in good faith and upon probable cause based upon reasonable grounds in ascertaining whether the customer, who did not speak English, was guilty of shoplifting. Jarjoura v. Fred's One & Two Dollar Store, Inc., 370 So. 2d 696 (Miss. 1979).

Where the facts are in dispute, the question of probable cause to stop and question a suspected shoplifter is for the court's determination, but under disputed facts, such question is one for the jury. Butler v. W.E. Walker Stores, Inc., 222 So. 2d 128 (Miss. 1969).

In an action brought by a shopper who alleged that the manager of a store had unlawfully stopped her and searched her purse without cause, an instruction in which mere suspicion was made the basis of probable cause to believe that the plaintiff was attempting to commit the act of shoplifting, was in error. Butler v. W.E. Walker Stores, Inc., 222 So. 2d 128 (Miss. 1969).

In order for a communication to be privileged the person making it must be careful to go no further than his interest or duties require, and a store manager who, instead of making inquiry in a reasonable manner of his cashier, accused the plaintiff of stealing a bar of soap exceeded the qualified privilege provided by this section [Code 1942, § 2374-04], and he and his employer thereby became liable to the party so unjustly accused. Southwest Drug Stores of Miss., Inc. v. Garner, 195 So. 2d 837, 29 A.L.R.3d 953 (Miss. 1967).

Mere suspicion, not grounded on definite information, does not justify detention of a customer. J.C. Penney Co. v. Cox, 246 Miss. 1, 148 So. 2d 679 (1963).

The qualified privilege under the statute [Code 1942, § 2374-04] does not give the merchant the right to embarrass or harass a suspect in public view of everyone in a rude manner, as by halting the customer on the store steps, demanding pay, and to be shown the contents of her purse and a paper bag. J.C. Penney Co. v. Cox, 246 Miss. 1, 148 So. 2d 679 (1963).

The burden of proof is on one asserting the right to question a customer believed to be a shoplifter, to show probable cause based upon reasonable ground. J.C. Penney Co. v. Cox, 246 Miss. 1, 148 So. 2d 679 (1963).

§ 97-23-96. Civil remedy for shoplifting violations; written demand prior to commencing civil proceedings; recovery from parents or legal guardians of minors; costs.

(1) Any person who proves by clear and convincing evidence that he has been injured in any fashion by reason of any violation of the provisions of Section 97-23-93, Mississippi Code of 1972, has a cause of action for threefold the actual damages sustained or damages in the amount of Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00), whichever is greater, reasonable attorney's fees and court costs in the trial and in any proceedings in appellate courts. The recovery of stolen goods regardless of condition shall not affect the right to the minimum recovery provided herein.

(2) Before filing an action for damages under this section, the person claiming injury must make a written demand for Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) or threefold the actual damages sustained, whichever is greater, of the person or accused liable for damages under this section. If the accused to whom a written demand is made complies with such demand within thirty (30) days after receipt of the demand, he shall be given a written release from further civil liability for the specific act of shoplifting by the victim making the written demand.

(3) Any victim who has a cause of action under this section may recover the damages allowed under this section from the parents or legal guardian of any unemancipated minor who lives with his parents or legal guardian and who is liable for damages under this section if it is proven that the parents or legal guardian had knowledge of the minor's intent to violate the provisions of Section 97-23-93 or aided and abetted the minor in such violations. Foster parents shall not be liable for the acts of children placed with them. Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed as to abrogate, compromise or violate any minor's right to confidentiality under any other provision of the Mississippi Code of 1972 or otherwise.

(4) In no event shall punitive damages be awarded under this section.

(5) In awarding damages, attorney's fees, expenses or costs under this section, the court shall not consider the ability of the opposing party to pay such fees and costs. Nothing under this section shall be interpreted as limiting any right to recover damages, attorney's fees, expenses or costs provided under other provisions of law.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Sufficiency of the evidence.
2. Indictments.

1. Sufficiency of the evidence.2. Indictments.

Indictment charging a person with money laundering under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-101(1)(b)(ii)(1) was required to specify the “unlawful activity” from which the illegal proceeds were alleged to have derived, and violation of this requirement may be cured only where the prosecution demonstrated that it otherwise provided timely notice to defendant of the alleged illegal activity, and that the notice clearly and sufficiently provided defendant a fair opportunity to prepare a defense to the charges; the omission of the “specified unlawful activity” in defendant’s indictment was harmless error which did not render the trial fundamentally unfair. Tran v. State, 962 So. 2d 1237 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 553 U.S. 1054, 128 S. Ct. 2472, 171 L. Ed. 2d 769, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 4212, 76 U.S.L.W. 3619 (2008).

One defendant’s conviction of money laundering was inappropriate under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-101(1)(b)(ii)(1) because the state failed to meet its burden of proof showing that defendant knew that the money at issue was hidden in a gas tank or that he knew that it represented proceeds of specified unlawful activity. Tran v. State, 963 So. 2d 1 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), affirmed by 962 So. 2d 1237, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 475 (Miss. 2007).

(b) “Person” means any individual, partnership, corporation, business, trust or other legal entity.

(c) “Residence” means a single or multiple family dwelling, including, but not limited to, a single family home, apartment building, condominium,

(2) A person commits the offense of home repair fraud when he knowingly:

(a) Enters into an agreement or contract, written or oral, with a person for home repair, and he knowingly:

(i) Misrepresents a material fact relating to the terms of the contract or agreement or the preexisting or existing condition of any portion of the property involved, or creates or confirms another's impression which is false and which he does not believe to be true, or promises performance which he does not intend to perform or knows will not be performed;

(ii) Uses or employs any deception, false pretense or false promises in order to induce, encourage or solicit such person to enter into any contract or agreement;

(iv) Uses deception, coercion or force to obtain the victim's consent to modification of the terms of the original contract or agreement;

(b) Damages the property of a person with the intent to enter into an agreement or contract for home repair; or

(c) Misrepresents himself or another to be an employee or agent of any unit of the federal, state or municipal government or any other governmental unit, or an employee or agent of any public utility, with the intent to cause a person to enter into, with himself or another, any contract or agreement for home repair.

(3) Intent and knowledge shall be determined by an evaluation of all circumstances surrounding a transaction and the determination shall not be limited to the time of contract or agreement.

(4) Substantial performance shall not include work performed in a manner of little or no value or work that fails to comply with the appropriate municipal, county, state or federal regulations or codes.

(5) Violation of this section shall be punished as follows:

(a) A first conviction under this section shall be a misdemeanor when the amount of the fraud is less than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six (6) months, or both.

(b) A second or subsequent conviction under this section shall be punished as follows:

(i) As a felony punishable by imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections not to exceed two (2) years when the amount of the fraud is more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) but less than Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00).

(ii) As a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six (6) months when the amount of the fraud is One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or less.

(c) A first or subsequent conviction under this section shall be a felony when the amount of the fraud is over Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) and shall be punished as follows:

(i) By imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections not to exceed five (5) years or a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) or both when the amount of the fraud is Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) or more, but less than Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00).

(ii) By imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Corrections not to exceed ten (10) years or a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) when the amount of the fraud is Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00) or more.

(6) In addition to any other sentence it may impose, the court shall order that the defendant shall make restitution to the victim, either within a specified period of time or in specified installments. The order shall not be enforceable during the period of imprisonment unless the court expressly finds that the defendant has assets to pay the amounts ordered at the time of sentencing. Intentional refusal to obey the restitution order or a failure by a defendant to make a good faith effort to make such restitution may be considered a violation of the defendant's probation and may be cause for revocation of his probation or suspension of sentence.

The presence at any time on or about such meter or meters, wire, cable, pipe or main of any device or unauthorized meter or pipe or wire resulting in the diversion of electric current, water or gas, as above defined, or resulting in the prevention of the proper action or just registration of the meter or meters as above set forth, the same being knowingly or intentionally installed, shall constitute prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of the person, firm or corporation having custody or control of the room or place where such device or pipe or wire is located, or the existence thereof and the effect thereof, and shall constitute prima facie evidence of the intention on the part of such person, firm or corporation to defraud and shall bring such person, firm or corporation prima facie within the scope, meaning and penalties of this section.

Provided further, that if any person, firm or corporation engaged in the selling or delivering of any electric current, water or gas, to a consumer shall knowingly cause to be installed any meter or meters intentionally adjusted or regulated so as to cause such meter or meters to register a greater amount of such electric current, water or gas, than actually passes through the same, shall be prima facie evidence of the knowledge of such person, firm or corporation engaged in selling or delivering such electric current, water or gas, of the existence thereof and shall bring such person, firm or corporation within the scope and meaning of this section, and subject to the operation of this section. Provided further, any employee, stockholder, or member of the board of directors who, with intent to defraud a customer, falsifies, or acquiesces in the falsifying, of any record which results in billing in excess of the amount lawfully due and owing, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) or sentenced to serve not more than six (6) months in jail, or both.

Provided further, this section shall not relieve any person, firm or corporation from any other liabilities now imposed by law.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Railroad special agent's permission to man to board freight train imposed no greater duty upon railroad than not to wantonly or wilfully injure man, since special agent had no authority to give such permission. Gulf & S.I.R.R. v. Still, 169 Miss. 69, 152 So. 824 (1934).

Trespasser injured in boarding freight train, when train suddenly jerked after he indicated to fireman that he intended to board train, held not entitled to recover for wilful or gross negligence, where it did not appear that engineer was informed of trespasser's peril. Gulf & S.I.R.R. v. Still, 169 Miss. 69, 152 So. 824 (1934).

Affidavit under this section [Code 1942, § 2347] averring merely that a person jumped off a moving railroad train charges no offense and arrest and imprisonment of a passenger under such an affidavit subjects the party to an action for false imprisonment. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Kuhn, 78 Miss. 114, 28 So. 797 (1900).

§ 97-25-17. Railroads; leaving switch open or improperly placed.

If any brakeman, switchman, or other person in charge of any switch, shall wilfully or carelessly leave the same open or improperly placed, whereby any person shall be killed or injured, he shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than fifteen years.

An instruction that it was unlawful for a railroad train to be operated within a city at more than six miles an hour, etc.,

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

This section [Code 1942, § 2340] is not unconstitutional for not sufficiently defining the elements constituting the crime. State v. Lucas, 221 Miss. 538, 73 So. 2d 158 (1954).

Where an indictment charged that the defendant unlawfully, wantonly and negligently obstructed a railroad by negligently and wantonly leaving his unattended automobile parked at a railroad crossing at a private road for automobiles, the indictment was sufficient in detail to inform the accused of the nature of the crime and the acts he is charged with having committed. State v. Lucas, 221 Miss. 538, 73 So. 2d 158 (1954).

§ 97-25-23. Railroads; obstructing or injuring; derailling cars.

If any person shall wantonly or maliciously injure, or place any impediment or obstruction on any railroad, or do any other act by means of which any car or vehicle might be caused to diverge, or be derailed, or thrown from the track, such person, on conviction, shall be committed to the custody of the department of corrections for a term of not less than one (1) year nor more than ten (10) years, and the penalty provided in this section shall apply to any engineer, conductor, switchman, brakeman, train dispatcher or telegraph operator who shall wilfully or negligently cause the derailment or collision of a passenger train.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Where two years and forty-two days elapsed from the date the offense of placing an obstruction on a railroad track whereby a train or part thereof might be derailed was committed to the date the prosecution was begun, and the state did not prove nor attempt to prove, nor was there any evidence on which it could be said that defendant was absent from the state any single day except at the time of his arrest, conviction must be reversed and remanded. McCullar v. State, 183 So. 487 (Miss. 1938).

2. Double jeopardy.

Defendant's prosecutions for both shooting into a vehicle under Miss. Code Ann.

§ 97-25-47 and murder under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(1)(a), did not subject him to double jeopardy since the crimes charged required additional facts separate from each other; murder, unlike shooting into a vehicle, required the deliberate killing of an individual and did not require defendant to have shot into a vehicle, while shooting into a vehicle required only that defendant willfully shot into or at a vehicle. Further, the facts were such that it was not clear whether defendant shot into the vehicle when he killed the victim, as there was testimony to the effect that the victim may have had all or part of his head outside the vehicle when he was shot; in essence, the facts were such that defendant could have been found guilty of murder and of shooting into a vehicle without any risk of exposure to double jeopardy. Peacock v. State, 970 So. 2d 197 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's claim of double jeopardy, pursuant to the Fifth Amendment, was without merit where application of the Blockburger test revealed that elements of each of the crimes of shooting into a vehicle, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-25-47, and aggravated assault, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2) were not contained in the other. Graves v. State, 969 So. 2d 845 (Miss. 2007).

3. Guilty pleas.

In withdrawing defendant's guilty plea for shooting into a vehicle under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-25-47, the trial court found that the evidence offered for defendant's guilt at the plea colloquy was inconsistent with the facts charged in the indictment. The trial court stated that additional evidence should have been elicited to make the proof offered conform with the indictment; since the evidence was only that defendant shot at a vehicle and not into a vehicle, the trial court properly set aside the guilty plea. Peacock v. State, 970 So. 2d 197 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

§ 97-25-49. Wrongful access to telecommunications messages by cellular telephone; inadmissibility of information obtained in violation of this section.

(1) A person who commits either of the following offenses shall be punished by a fine of not more than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six (6) months, or both:

(a) Wrongfully obtains, or attempts to obtain, any knowledge of a private telecommunications message by gaining access to the origination, transmission, emission or reception of signs, signals, data, writings, images and sounds or intelligence of any nature by cellular telephone, when such person is not the lawfully intended recipient of the message or is not authorized to have access to such message, or by connivance with a clerk, operator, messenger or other employee of a telecommunications company; or

(b) Being such clerk, operator, messenger or other employee, uses, or suffers to be used, or willfully divulges to anyone but the person for whom it was intended, the contents of a cellular phone message.

(c) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to the use of a telephone monitoring device by either a law enforcement agency acting pursuant to a valid court order or to a corporation or other business entity engaged in marketing research or telephone solicitation conversations by an employee of the corporation or other business entity when the monitoring is used for the purpose of service quality control and the monitoring is used with the consent of at least one (1) person who is a party to the conversation.

(d) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to an employee of a cellular telephone company who discloses or uses an intercepted communication in the normal course of business as a necessary incident to providing service or to the protection of the rights or property of the employer or who provides assistance to an investigative or law enforcement officer acting under a valid court order.

(2) Any information obtained in violation of this section shall not be admissible in any civil proceeding unless the information was obtained by the lawful owner of the device that obtained the information.

or attempt to avoid or to aid, abet or cause another to avoid the lawful charge in whole or in part for telephone or telegraph service by any of the following means:

(i) By charging the service to an existing telephone number or credit card number without the authority of the subscriber thereto or the lawful holder thereof;

(ii) By charging the service to a nonexistent telephone number or credit card number, or to a number associated with telephone service which is suspended or terminated, or to a revoked, cancelled or expired credit card number, notice of the suspension, termination, revocation or cancellation of the telephone service or credit card having been given to the subscriber thereto or the holder thereof;

the consent of the telecommunication service provider or to conceal or to assist another to conceal from any telecommunication service provider or from any lawful authority the existence or place of origin or of destination of any communication is guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one (1) year, a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or both. Any person who possesses ten (10) or more such unlawful telecommunication devices is guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed Fifty Thousand Dollars ($50,000.00), commitment to the custody of the State Department of Corrections not to exceed ten (10) years, or both.

(c) Any person who manufactures ten (10) or more telecommunications devices and intends to sell them to others intending to avoid the payment of any lawful charge for service to the device is guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed Fifty Thousand Dollars ($50,000.00), commitment to the custody of the State Department of Corrections not to exceed ten (10) years, or both.

For the purposes of this section, "publishes" means the communication of information to any one or more persons, either orally, in person or by telephone, radio or television, or electronic means, including without limitation a bulletin board system, or in a writing of any kind, including without limitation a letter or memorandum, circular or handbill, newspaper, magazine article, or book.

(5) It shall be unlawful for any person who is the holder of a calling card, credit card, calling code, or any other means or device for the legal use of telecommunications services and who receives anything of value for knowingly allowing another person to use the means or device in order to fraudulently obtain telecommunication services.

(6)(a) A person shall be guilty of theft of telecommunications services if, having control over the disposition of services of others to which he is not entitled, he knowingly diverts such services to his own benefit or to the benefit of another not entitled thereto. Theft of telecommunications services when the value of the services obtained or diverted is less than Fifty Dollars ($50.00) shall be a misdemeanor. Theft of telecommunications services when the value of the services obtained or diverted is Fifty Dollars ($50.00) or more shall be a felony and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), or commitment to the custody of the State Department of Corrections for a period not to exceed ten (10) years, or both.

(b) Amounts involved in theft of services committed pursuant to one scheme or course of conduct, whether from the same person or several persons, may be aggregated in determining the gravity of the offense.

(7) The provisions of this section shall apply to any telecommunication service which either originates or terminates or both originates and terminates in this state or when the charges for service would have been billable, in normal course, by a person or entity providing telecommunication service in this state, but for the fact that the charge or service was avoided, or attempted to be avoided, by one or more means proscribed by this section.

(8) Except as otherwise provided herein, the first offense under this section shall be a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not to exceed One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) or imprisonment not to exceed one (1) year, or both. A second or subsequent offense under this section shall be a felony and shall be punishable by a fine not to exceed Fifty Thousand Dollars ($50,000.00) or commitment to the custody of the State Department of Corrections not to exceed ten (10) years, or both.

(9) Any person defrauded by any acts prohibited under this section shall be entitled to restitution for the entire amount of the charges avoided from any person or persons convicted under this section. The court may, in addition to any other sentence authorized by law, sentence a person convicted of violating this section to make restitution.

(10) A telecommunication service provider aggrieved by a violation of this section may, in a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction, obtain appropriate relief, including preliminary and other equitable or declaratory relief, compensatory and punitive damages, reasonable investigation expenses, costs of court and attorney fees.

(11) Any instrument, apparatus, device, plans, instructions, kit, or written publication described in subsection (2) or (3) of this section may be seized under warrant or incident to a lawful arrest, and, upon the conviction of a person for a violation of this section, the instrument, apparatus, device, plans, instructions, or written publication may be destroyed as contraband as provided by law.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Evidence.

Although defendant used the victim's phone following her death—making and receiving some 60 calls while using the phone—the evidence was insufficient to support defendant's conviction of felony theft of telecommunication services because the State failed to present any evidence to establish that the value of the services obtained or diverted by defendant exceeded $50. Nevertheless, despite this failure of proof, the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of the lesser offense of misdemeanor theft of telecommunications services. Bartolo v. State, 32 So. 3d 522 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

§ 97-25-55. Aircraft piracy; boarding aircraft with dangerous or deadly weapon or instrument.

(1) The offense of aircraft piracy is defined as the seizure or exercise of control, by force or violence or threat of force or violence, of any aircraft within the airspace jurisdiction of the State of Mississippi. Any person convicted of the offense of aircraft piracy shall suffer death or imprisonment for life in the state penitentiary.

(2) The offense of assault with the intent to commit aircraft piracy is defined as an intimidation, threat, assault or battery toward any flight crew member or flight attendant (including any steward or stewardess) of such aircraft so as to interfere with the performance of duties by such member or attendant to perform his duties, with the intent to commit aircraft piracy as defined in subsection (1) of this section. Any person convicted of the offense of assault with intent to commit aircraft piracy shall serve a term not to exceed twenty (20) years or be fined a sum not to exceed ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00), or both.

Any person who, in the commission of such intimidation, threat, assault or battery with the intent to commit aircraft piracy, employs a dangerous or deadly weapon or other means capable of inflicting serious bodily injury shall serve a term not to exceed fifty (50) years or be fined a sum not to exceed twenty thousand dollars ($20,000.00), or both.

(3) Any person who boards an aircraft with a dangerous or deadly weapon or other means capable of inflicting serious bodily injury concealed upon his person or effects shall, upon conviction, serve a term not to exceed ten (10) years or be fined a sum not to exceed five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), or both. The prohibition of this subsection shall not apply to duly elected or appointed law enforcement officers or commercial security personnel who are in possession of weapons used within the course and scope of their employment; nor shall the prohibition apply to persons who are in possession of weapons or means with the consent of the owner of such aircraft, or his agent, or the lessee or bailee of such aircraft.

(4) Anyone accused of violating subsection (1), (2) or (3) of this section shall be indicted and tried as provided by section 99-11-19.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

There is nothing in either this section [Code 1942, § 2336] or Code 1942, § 2338 to indicate that the legislature intended to make it a crime for the owner to use a carcass of an animal described within those sections. King v. Mississippi Power & Light Co., 244 Miss. 486, 142 So. 2d 222 (1962).

Guaranties against unreasonable searches and seizures do not apply to routine inspections by sanitary officers, nor do they apply to inspections made pursuant to advance information that the health laws have been, or are about to be, violated. Grillis v. State, 196 Miss. 576, 17 So. 2d 525 (1944).

Search and seizure of diseased hog meat found in accused's restaurant by city health officers without a search warrant, upon advance information that the health laws had been, or were about to be, violated, did not constitute a violation of the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures. Grillis v. State, 196 Miss. 576, 17 So. 2d 525 (1944).

Evidence that friendly policemen told restaurant proprietor that meat of diseased hog was fit for human consumption if it had been inoculated against cholera did not furnish a valid excuse for slaughtering such hog and bringing it to accused's restaurant for the purpose of selling it for human consumption, but could be considered only by way of extenuation. Grillis v. State, 196 Miss. 576, 17 So. 2d 525 (1944).

Upon conviction of restaurant proprietor of attempt to sell diseased flesh of an animal for human consumption, under indictment bringing offense either under this section [Code 1942, § 2336] or Code 1942, § 2338, but specifically referring to neither section, nor charging that defendant was a butcher or that his occupation might be classified as that of a butcher, sentence should be that imposed by Code 1942, § 2338, under rule that when the facts which constitute a criminal offense may fall under either of two sections, or when there is substantial doubt as to which of the two is to be applied, the case will be referred to the statute which imposes the lesser punishment, having regard for the rule that under the attempt statute no greater punishment may be administered than that prescribed for the actual commission of the offense attempted. Grillis v. State, 196 Miss. 576, 17 So. 2d 525 (1944).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In an indictment under this section [Code 1942, § 2325], the declaration is insufficient in the case of a minor of the age of discretion, unless it charges that there was something in the character of the minor rendering it dangerous to put chloroform in his hands or that he was ignorant or inexperienced in its use. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 16 So. 245 (1894).

Though one selling poison under this section [Code 1942, § 2325] is punishable under Code 1892, § 1954 (Code 1906, § 1527), and guilty of negligence per se, he is not liable for special damages sustained unless the sale is the proximate cause of the injury. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 16 So. 245 (1894).

§ 97-27-33. Poisons; inhalation of toxic vapors from model glue; unlawful glue sales to minors.

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person to intentionally smell or inhale the fumes of any type of model glue for the purpose of causing a condition of, or inducing symptoms of, intoxication, elation, euphoria, dizziness, excitement, irrational behavior, exhilaration, paralysis, stupefaction, or dulling of the senses or nervous system; or for the purpose of, in any manner, changing, distorting or disturbing the audio, visual or mental processes.

(2) As used in this section, the term “model glue” shall mean any glue or cement of the type commonly used in the building of model airplanes, boats and automobiles and which contains one or more of the following volatile solvents: (a) toluol, (b) hexane, (c) trichlorethylene, (d) acetone, (e) toluene, (f) ethyl acetate, (g) methyl ethyl ketone, (h) trichlorochthane, (i) isopropanol, (j) methyl isobutyl ketone, (k) methyl cellosolve acetate, (l) cyclohexanone, or (m) any other solvent, material, substance, chemical or combination thereof having the property of releasing toxic vapors.

(3) It shall be unlawful for any person to sell or otherwise transfer possession of any type of model glue to any minor for any purpose whatsoever, unless the minor receiving possession of the model glue is the child or ward of and under the lawful custody of such person.

(4) Any person violating any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00), or imprisoned for not more than ninety (90) days, or both, for each such offense.

2. Indictment or affidavit charging offense.
3. Evidence.
4. —Admissibility.
5. —Sufficiency.
6. Instructions.
7. Miscellaneous.
8. Child Custody.

1. In general.

Sections 97-29-1, 97-29-3, 97-29-5, 97-29-7, and 97-29-9, which prohibit adultery and fornication under specified circumstances, do not give any individual a private cause of action for their breach. Saunders v. Alford, 607 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1992).

One acquitted of a charge under this section [Code 1942, § 1998] is not put twice in jeopardy when charged under Code 1942, § 2000, penalizing incest. Ratcliff v. State, 234 Miss. 724, 107 So. 2d 728 (1958).

This section [Code 1942, § 1998] is no obstacle to a bona fide attempt to invest unlawful cohabitation with the attributes of a common-law marriage. Oatis v. Mingo, 199 Miss. 896, 26 So. 2d 453 (1946).

Cohabitation defined. Spikes v. State, 98 Miss. 483, 54 So. 1 (1911).

Habitual sexual intercourse held gist of offense under statute. Spikes v. State, 98 Miss. 483, 54 So. 1 (1911).

A teacher who, during a short period of time, commits a few acts of sexual intercourse with a pupil, openly in the school-room is not guilty of cohabitation with her. Brown v. State, 8 So. 257 (Miss. 1890).

It is not necessary to constitute the crime, that the parties should represent themselves as married. Kinard v. State, 57 Miss. 132 (1879).

Criminal intercourse once shown is presumed to continue if the parties be living under the same roof, although those who dwell with them are not prepared to depose to the fact. Carotti v. State, 42 Miss. 334, 97 Am. Dec. 465 (1868).

2. Indictment or affidavit charging offense.

Indictment against defendants charging them with the crime of unlawful cohabitation and adultery on a certain date and then continuously until the day of the filing and the returning of the indictment, defendants not being married to each other, was sufficient to apprise defendants of the nature and character of the accusation against them, and, if the indictment was deficient in any particular, the defect would have been amendable if the point had been raised in the trial court, which was not done. Patterson v. State, 190 Miss. 643, 1 So. 2d 499 (1941).

Affidavit held insufficient to charge habitual sexual intercourse. Jones v. State, 133 Miss. 801, 98 So. 342 (1923).

Indictment for unlawful cohabitation need not allege that one was a man and the other a woman. Tynes v. State, 93 Miss. 119, 46 So. 535, 136 Am. St. R. 540 (1908).

3. Evidence.

State must show parties were not married to each other as alleged in indictment. Dean v. State, 139 Miss. 515, 104 So. 295 (1925).

Proof of acts within two years before indictment makes a case in prosecution for unlawful cohabitation. State v. Meyer, 135 Miss. 878, 101 So. 349 (1924).

It is necessary to show that the parties, whether dwelling together or not, habitually indulge in sexual intercourse. Granberry v. State, 61 Miss. 440 (1884).

4. —Admissibility.

Where evidence in prosecutions for unlawful cohabitation disclosed cohabitation by the defendants within the period of limitation, evidence of continuous cohabitation by them for several years prior, and up to the beginning of, the limitation period was admissible to illustrate or characterize the relation and conduct of the defendants shown to have existed or to have occurred within the time covered by the indictment. Housley v. State, 198 Miss. 837, 23 So. 2d 749 (1945); Strong v. State, 199 Miss. 17, 23 So. 2d 750 (1945).

In prosecution for unlawful cohabitation, the fact that the defendants had been acquitted of a similar offense some time prior to the finding of the indictment under which they were tried did not preclude the admission of evidence of improper familiarity and criminal intimacy between the defendants prior to the findings of the former indictment. Housley v. State, 198 Miss. 837, 23 So. 2d 749 (1945); Strong v. State, 199 Miss. 17, 23 So. 2d 750 (1945).

Evidence tending to show improper familiarity and criminal intimacy subsequent to the finding of the indictment is admissible to illustrate and characterize the relations and conduct of the parties, shown to have existed or occurred within the time covered by the indictment, if such act be not too remote in point of time. Stewart v. State, 64 Miss. 626, 2 So. 73 (1887).

5. —Sufficiency.

Evidence of acts of sexual intercourse, without showing cohabitation, was insufficient to sustain conviction for unlawful cohabitation. Cutrer v. State, 154 Miss. 80, 121 So. 106 (1929).

Uncorroborated testimony of female co-defendant is sufficient to sustain conviction for unlawful cohabitation. Cutrer v. State, 154 Miss. 80, 121 So. 106 (1929).

Proof necessary to sustain conviction for unlawful cohabitation stated; when one or two acts relied on, proof must show habitual existence of relation. Lee v. City of Oxford, 134 Miss. 647, 99 So. 509 (1924).

It is unnecessary to show that the parties dwell together or publicly avow the relationship; it is sufficient to show habitual concubinage or lying together. Granberry v. State, 61 Miss. 440 (1884).

6. Instructions.

Conviction of unlawful cohabitation in adultery would be reversed where instruction granted on behalf of state wholly failed to require jury to believe beyond a reasonable doubt from the circumstances or otherwise, that either of defendants was married to some other person at the time complained of before the jury could return a verdict of guilty, and all the proof disclosed that the relations between defendants were such as to constitute a valid common law marriage between them except for the fact that one of the defendants denied the relationship in toto. Patterson v. State, 190 Miss. 643, 1 So. 2d 499 (1941).

7. Miscellaneous.

Decedent's survivors sought to recover proceeds from a bank account that a joint tenant shared with decedent; because the two were cohabitating and were not married, a confidential relationship existed, which led to a presumption of undue influence. The joint tenant failed to rebut the presumption. Dean v. Kavanaugh, 920 So. 2d 528 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

A chancellor did not err in dismissing a complaint in which a woman sought "equitable division of partnership assets” accumulated during 13 years of cohabitation with her companion where the parties never entered into a ceremonial marriage, the woman was not an innocent partner to a void marriage, and she was not destitute but was well-compensated during and after the relationship; the legislature has not extended the rights enjoyed by married people to those who choose merely to cohabit, and cohabitation remains a “crime against public morals and decency” under this section. Davis v. Davis, 643 So. 2d 931 (Miss. 1994).

While remarks in argument to jury by district attorney in prosecution for unlawful cohabitation can be shown either by special bill of exceptions or the reporter’s notes, in either case they must be shown before the supreme court can know whether they were harmful. Strong v. State, 199 Miss. 17, 23 So. 2d 750 (1945).

Error of justice in failing to properly sentence accused did not deprive him of right to plead former conviction. Smithey v. State, 93 Miss. 257, 46 So. 410 (1908).

Where in the trial of the accused for unlawful cohabitation no imprisonment was inflicted, the justice of the peace trying him should have an alias capias served on defendant and impose some imprisonment. Smithey v. State, 93 Miss. 257, 46 So. 410 (1908).

A white man and a negro woman cannot maintain an assignment of error in the supreme court based on the fact that the district attorney appealed to the jury to discountenance miscegenation. Stewart v. State, 64 Miss. 626, 2 So. 73 (1887).

8. Child Custody.

After the parties’ divorce in which the former wife was awarded primary custody of the son, she moved four times, dated several men, and cohabited with a man. The chancellor found that the child’s best interests required a change in custody and awarded the former husband primary physical custody. Hill v. Hill, 942 So. 2d 207 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 758 (Miss. 2006).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

2. Evidence.

1. In general.

With respect to defendant who pleaded guilty to incest, a day-for-day 10-year sentence and $10,000 fine did not exceed the statutory maximum because he was not eligible for parole under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-3(1)(b) or for earned time allowance under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-5-139(1)(d), and the fine was authorized under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-32(1). Co- chran v. State, 969 So. 2d 119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Sections 97-29-1, 97-29-3, 97-29-5, 97-29-7, and 97-29-9, which prohibit adultery and fornication under specified circumstances, do not give any individual a private cause of action for their breach. Saunders v. Alford, 607 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1992).

Consent is not a necessary element of incest. Where a defendant is charged with incest with a minor female, the consent of the minor female will not change the character of the act of the defendant. The defendant will be held to answer for his own conduct and it is his acts which complete the crime of incest. The defendant's guilt is measured by his knowledge and his intent and not by the knowledge or intent of the minor female on whom he committed the offense. Keeton v. State, 549 So. 2d 960 (Miss. 1989).

This section [Code 1942, § 2000], as amended by Chapter 241, Laws of 1956, was not violated by the mere cohabitation between negroes and whites. Ratcliff v. State, 234 Miss. 724, 107 So. 2d 728 (1958); Rose v. State, 234 Miss. 731, 107 So. 2d 730 (1958).

Since a marriage between a white person and a negro is not incestuous but is miscegenetic, and an incestuous relationship is an element of the denounced offense, Code 1942, § 2000 is not violated where a white person and a negro cohabit, or live together as husband and wife, in absence of allegations as to an incestuous relationship. Ratcliff v. State, 234 Miss. 724, 107 So. 2d 728 (1958); Rose v. State, 234 Miss. 731, 107 So. 2d 730 (1958).

One is not put twice in jeopardy by being charged under this section [Code 1942, § 2000] after having been acquitted under Code 1942, § 1998, penalizing adultery and fornication. Ratcliff v. State, 234 Miss. 724, 107 So. 2d 728 (1958).

Cohabitation, adultery or fornication with one's adopted daughter is not incest within the purview of this section [Code 1942, § 2000]. State v. Lee, 196 Miss. 311, 17 So. 2d 277, 151 A.L.R. 1143 (1944).

This section [Code 1942, § 2000], by omitting the words "of consanguinity" after the word "degrees," as in Code 1871, evidently changes the law as announced in Chancellor v. State, 47 M 278, where it is said that "cohabitation by a man with his step-daughter is not incestuous." Chancellor v. State, 47 Miss. 278 (1872).

2. Evidence.
